Ferries strike at midnight

B.C. Ferries sailings are in for some rough weather during the Thanksgiving weekend as ferry workers say they will start rotating strikes at 12:01 a.m. Saturday.

Shirley Mathieson, president of the 2,700-member B.C. Ferry and Marine Workers' Union said the first run to be struck will be the Horseshoe Bay-Departure Bay and Langdale ferry routes. That rotating strike will last 24 hours and will immediately be followed by a 24-hour strike against the Tsawassen-Swartz Bay run.

However, the union has said there will be no strikes Monday.

The decision to take rotating strike action follows a rejection by the employees of industrial inquiry commisioner Clive McKee's recommendations for settlement of the contract dispute by a 55-per-cent margin.

The results of the balloting among the 2,600 union members were released shortly after noon today.

McKee had proposed a 27-month contract expiring Oct. 31 instead of July 31. He also suggested an eight-per-cent wage increase in each of the first two years and two per cent in the final three months.

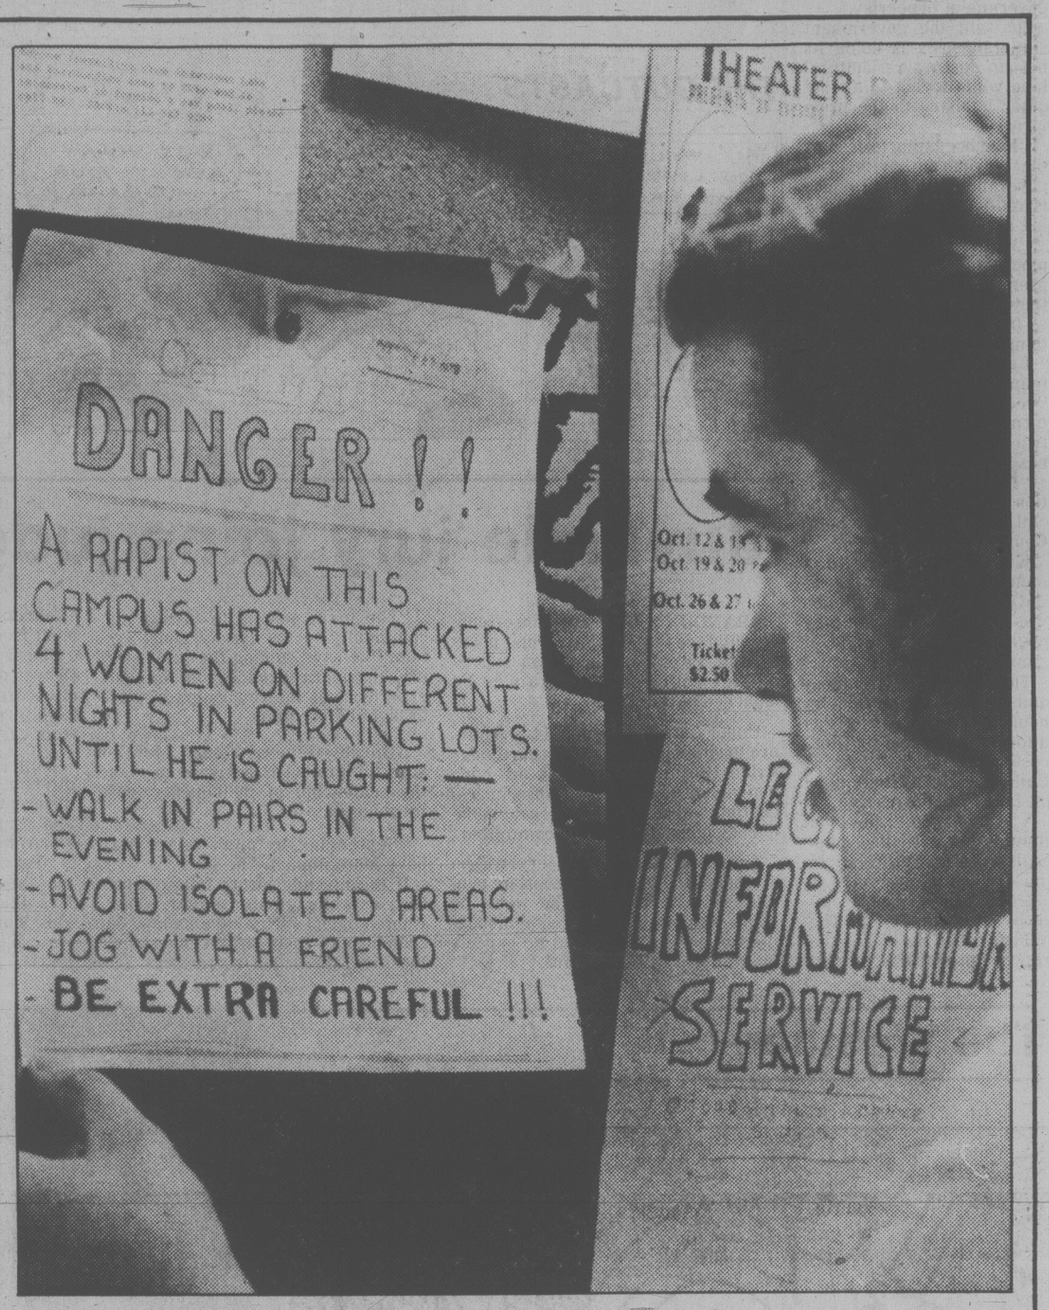
McKee also proposed a solution to the long-standing, complicated hours-of-work problem but the union executive said it was not happy

Union leaders also let it be known they weren't pleased with the status of causal workers, the loss of a cost-of-living adjustment and both the term of the contract as well as the wage offer.

The corporation has said there is no justification for salaries beyond what were accepted by 40,000 public sector employees, members of the B.C. Government Employees' Union. That union recently accepted a three-year contract with raises of eight per cent in each year.

The last strike by ferry workers occurred during the Thanksgiving holiday period in 1977. The corporation lost an estimated 282,000 passengers during a week-long full-fledged strike.

The workers were ordered to return to work after the provincial government invoked essential services legislation.



Posters urge women students to avoid isolated areas and not to go out alone

Goggled rapist throws fear into UVic campus

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Posters warning women students at the University of Victoria about a rapist have gone up on buildings across the campus.

Women going out at night are being urged to travel only in groups and to report any strange incidents.

The posters urge the female students not to go out at nights unless they are accompanied and, where possible, to notify the UVic security services first of their movements.

Department head chairmen have been asked to make arrangements to escort female staff members to their cars if they work late at night.

And some professors have been issuing warnings to their classes about the rapist.

The measures result from reports released simultaneously by Oak Bay and Saanich police Wednesday of an attempted rape on Sept. 19 and a rape Tuesday night.

The suspect is described as a youth in his early 20s, medium build, and clean shaven. On both occasions he wore ski goggles.

Notices posted around the campus suggest there may have been two other attempts and the student paper Martlet said today a person of similar description to the rapist was spotted peeping into the women's shower room at the McKinnon gym Tuesday.

Police are puzzled by the notices which say there have been two other attempted rapes.

But there may be an explanations for the discrepancy.

Win Whale of the public relations office said it is his understanding the notices were posted by the Victoria Rape Relief Centre.

The centre assumes that for every rape reported there is one that is not, and this would account for the doubling of incidents.

David Clode, general manager of the Alma Mater Society said concern is beginning to escalate on campus.

"Everyone is getting on the bandwagon. The problem is no one is sure what is the best appoach to adopt in catching this character."

Mike Elcock, manager of athletics and recreational services said today he is now in the process of organizing female joggers into groups.

Elcock said he is upset police delayed so long in making the first incident public.

"I am appalled," he said. "It seems the police were using the campus female population as guinea pigs in order to catch the guy."

Although a artist's sketch of the rapist has been widely publicized, police are still without a suspect.

Saanich Det. Sgt. Don Russell said there are certain features in common in the two reported cases.

In each the victim was petite and has long, light-colored hair. They both drive small, four-door cars with reclining seats.

In both attacks, the women were getting into their cars when the rapist approached.

He got into the back seat and holding a hunting knife to their throats, ordered them to drive to a secluded location.

In the first incident the woman managed to escape and ran naked to a nearby house to get help.

He urged women to park their cars in well-lit areas and to check to make certain no one is hiding in the back seat when they get in. Once inside, the car doors should immediately be locked.

Growers fight direct buying

OLIVER (CP) — The Okanagan's $40-million-a-year fruit industry is angry over a move by the Kelly Douglas-Super-Valu organization to buy apples directly from two Oliver orchards, bypassing the grower-owned B.C. Tree Fruits Ltd. marketing firm.

The apples have been sold as orchard run, unwashed and unwaxed and Super-Valu has sold them for as low as 29 cents a pound compared with Tree Fruits apples at 49 cents a pound sold by competitors.

The industry sees the Kelly Douglas move as the first major threat to the marketing network and fears other growers will return to direct-selling methods.

The wholesale-retail firms, both part of the giant Weston food empire, have bought an estimated 700,000 pounds of apples from the independents and the apples now are on sale in Vancouver.

From 1939 until about five years ago it was compulsory for all growers in the Okanagan to sell fresh fruit through B.C. Tree Fruits Ltd., a marketing agency set up under provincial legislation to put a halt to retailers pitting grower against grower.

The compulsory aspect was eliminated by the NDP when it introduced farm income assurance. Growers can make direct sales to stores but if caught can be struck from the ranks of the 2,200-member B.C. Fruit-Growers Association and not be eligible for assurance benefits.

The Oliver growers are Graem Nelson and Ronald Fournier, both with 6.5-hectare orchards.

They formed a company called Black Sage Orchards which bought apples from about 75 growers in the Okanagan — some of them coming from executive members of the growers' association and a few board members from packing houses.

"We have shipped more than three-quarters of a million pounds of apples to Kelly Douglas as well as about 36 truckloads of apples outside of B.C. this year," Fournier said.

Pope raps liberal trends

Times News Services

CHICAGO — Pope John Paul II lashed out at liberal trends among U.S. Roman Catholics today, reaffirming the church's condemnation of birth control, abortion, adultery and homosexuality.

The pontiff's hard-line stand on issues that have been splitting the American church for decades came in an unprecedented special session of the U.S. Bishops Conference and dispelled speculation that John Paul would tone down his conservative message before liberal Catholics in the United States.

The ban on contraception has been a point of growing dissent ever since it was reasserted in the late Pope Paul VI's 1968 encyclical. Surveys indicate about 80 per cent of North American Catholics ignore it.

In a wide-ranging speech dealing with the whole spectrum of church attitudes toward sexuality, John Paul reaffirmed that sex outside marriage is sinful:

"In portraying the sexual union between husband and wife as a special expression of their covenanted love you rightly stated that sexual intercourse is a moral and human good only within marriage; outside marriage it is wrong."

In his most explicit reference to the subject since being elected to the papacy, John Paul also said: "Homosexual activity, as distinguished from homosexual orientation, is morally wrong."

He condemned, too, the growing acceptance of abor-

Runka resigning over land thaw

Times News Services

VANCOUVER — The man who set up the B.C. Land Commission in 1973 is quitting over the cabinet committee's decision to free some 700 acres of Fraser Valley farm land from the Agricultural Land Reserve.

Gary Runka, who served as the commission's chairman and general manager, handed in his resignation today.

Runka, who is currently a commissioner, said he is upset over the second-guessing of the commission by the cabinet's Environmental and Land Use Committee.

Meanwhile, a director of the companies that were given government approval to remove 626 acres of Langley farmland from the agricultural land reserve said today she worked on Health Minister Bob McClelland's re-election campaign last spring.

Ainslie Loretto, director of Gloucester Properties Ltd., said she did "a little political work" in McClelland's Social Credit campaign headquarters.

However, she said no company or personal money was donated to either McClelland's campaign or the party.

"I happen to be a member of the Social Credit party — that's my democratic right — but I doubt anyone in Victoria other than him

Marguerite to be scrapped

Transportation Minister Alex Fraser said today the province is shopping in Europe for a new ship to replace the Princess Marguerite.

He said the government will keep the Victoria-Seattle tourist ferry service as well as service to northern communities, including the Queen Charlottes.

But he indicated the venerable Marguerite will be scrapped as being too expensive to refit to meet shipping and environmental standards.

.05 drunk law urged

The provincial Motor Vehicle Task Force wants police to have the power to hand out 24-hour suspensions to anyone who blows more than .05 on breathalyzer tests.

The present level at which a driver is charged with impaired driving is .08.

Assistant Attorney-General Neil McDiarmid, who heads the eight-man task force, told a CounterAttack luncheon Thursday his committee wants harsher treatment of drivers who ignore driving suspensions.

McDiarmid said the medical profession claims that anyone's judgment is impaired at the .05 level.

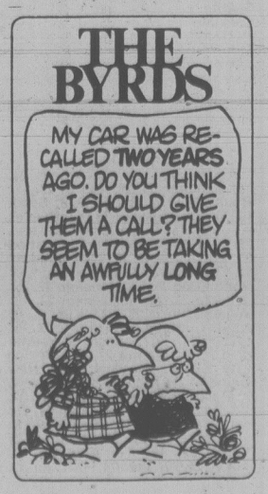
McDiarmid acknowledged that policeman already have the authority to hand out 24-hour roadside suspensions if they think a suspect is too impaired to drive, but not enough to blow .08.

For suspended drivers caught driving, McDiarmid's committee had recommended imprisonment and stiffer fines. He now feels the impounding of vehicles might be necessary to deter such violators.

Throughout his speech, McDiarmid referred to the public's attitude on drinking drivers. The public still jokes about drunk drivers, but McDiarmid doesn't see anything humorous about drivers who kill, maim and destroy property.

One of the reasons the courts are clogged is that 40 per cent of the cases involve drinking drivers. Drinking drivers cost the province $112 million in 1978.

A successful project in Vernon, which the province believes saved $40,000 in court and police overtime costs, involved videotaping drunk drivers after they were arrested. It is considered the best device for getting drunk driving convictions.



Gold prices like yo-yo

LONDON (UPI) — After another steep plunge at the opening, gold prices recovered today to reach $385 at the afternoon fixing on the London bullion market — almost $60 an ounce below Tuesday's record.

But their were wide variations on world markets.

The price of gold had dropped steadily most of the week as rumors about gold sales and support plans for the U.S. dollar floated out of the International Monetary Fund-World Bank conference in Belgrade.

(McClelland) ever knew I worked in his office."

The B.C. Federation of Agriculture has branded as hypocritical the committee decision to remove the 626 acres of land in Langley from the ALR.

Pat Hibbert, B.C. Federation president, said in an interview in Vernon that the decision is a continuation of government hypocrisy.

He said the government simultaneously is doing its best to destroy agricultural land while trying to attract other industry to the province.

"I am beginning to despair that anyone in any level of government in this province is really serious about saving agricultural land.

"We are getting all sorts of pious statements from the premier on down about how they believe in this principle — but actions speak louder than words."

Land commission spokesman Axel Kinnear said it is "very concerned because we turned down the application twice and, now the cabinet has approved it."

"It does put us in the position of having it kind of difficult administering the Land Commission Act."

Kinnear, along with a number of other critics of the cabinet decision, said he was also worried that it may open to the door to a rash of similar applications.

The cabinet's environment and land use committee announced Wednesday it was allowing an appeal by Glouscesters Properties Ltd., a Chilean company, to remove the land from the reserve.

A 1977 change in the land commission act allows appeals to be made directly to the environment minister after they have been rejected by the commission. The minister then decides if the appeal can go to the environment and land use committee.

"This was quite a significant decision, but I'm sure the government quite realizes that and they took it into consideration," Kinnear said.

But he said he was worried about the Langley decision because the land is in an agricultural area and "we wouldn't like to see it setting a precedent for other parcels of land."

"We are concerned that there will be a rash of appeals to get class four and five land out of the agricultural reserve. This could be opening the door."

Environment Minister Rafe Mair said Thursday he knew nothing about the application to exempt the land from the reserve, although he signed the order to release it as he signs all orders.

Health Minister Bob McClelland, MLA for the area, said the cabinet decision does not mean any lack of faith in the land commission.

He said the commission has to operate under narrow criteria in making their decisions; the cabinet committee has broader terms of reference and can consider the land's history, economics and its possible future use. However, he declined to disclose why the appeal was allowed, saying cabinet decisions are secret.

CLiff Stainsby, executive director of the Scientific Pollution and Environmental Control society, said land commission members should resign because of lack of support from the provincial government.

"They're basically telling their land commission that they're incompetent," he said.

Harry de Jong, chairman of the Central Fraser Valley regional district which has jurisdiction over the development, accused the cabinet committee of playing politics.

"I believe it was a purely political decision not based on land classifications, which should be the first consideration," he said.

"If we're going to have a land reserve, let's reserve some land."

He said the development will mean windfall profits of $30 million for Gloucester.

Ainslie Loretto, a company director, labelled the accusation as garbage, but would not come up with an alternative figure. She said the company will spend $42 million servicing the property and expects to make a fair profit.

Mayor George Driediger of Langley township said the development will benefit the municipality by providing a strong industrial base.

Juvenile jury joins judgments

BRANDON (CP) — Juvenile offenders will face the scrutiny of their peers as well as a judge under an experimental courtroom program to be launched here this fall.

Under the experiment, six juveniles are to sit alongside family court judge Brian Giesbrecht in cases involving non-violent incidents. Giesbrecht will continue to decide whether a delinquency has actually been committed.

The role of the 'juvenile jury' will be limited to suggesting appropriate penalties. Giesbrecht says he won't be obliged to accept the recommendations of the juveniles, but he expects their advice will be helpful.

"The main goal is to involve the community in the family court system," he says, adding the jurors will probably learn as much from the court experience as the youngsters who are brought before him.

Attorney-General Gerry Mercier says the project is designed to make the sentencing of delinquents more meaningful.

"Sentencing by one's peers may have more impact," he says.

If the juvenile jurors follow a pattern established in Denver, Colo., where student juries have handed out sentences to about 300 juveniles since the program began six months ago, offenders shouldn't expect light treatment from their peers.

Charlene Shaffer, a counsellor in the Denver program, says juvenile jurors often are harder on their peers than family court officials, for everything from car theft to assault.

Zora Lee Stienberg, the program's director, says the jurors come from different economic and racial groups, and a number of them have probably experimented with marijuana.

"Yet they really seem offended at the ones who are selling the drug," Mrs. Stienberg said. "They ask these kids 'how would you feel if someone was selling drugs to your little sister?'"

Sooke house fire blamed on furnace

A faulty propane furnace is believed the cause of a fire which gutted the interior of a house at 6734 Grant Road in Sooke early today.

Sooke RCMP estimated at least $5,000 damage was done in the blaze reported by a neighbor at 2:35 a.m.

Occupant Wendy Cucuheran was not at home at the time.

ZOLTAN KASZAS
. . . missing three weeks

Police appeal for help

City police have appealed to the public for help in locating a 51-year-old Victoria man missing for three weeks.

Zoltan (Steve) Kaszas was last seen at 7:30 a.m. Sept. 17 outside his apartment at 707 Esquimalt Road.

Kaszas didn't show up for work that morning at the University of Victoria where he is employed as a gardener.

Three days later UVic security manager Tom O'Conner reported him missing to police.

Kaszas is described as five feet 10 inches tall, 170 pounds, with brown hair.

Anyone who may have seen him is asked to contact Detective Insp. Angus Stewart at 384-4111.

Herpes treatment developed

SASKATOON (CP) — Researchers at the University of Saskatchewan have developed a drug to treat herpes virus, which in its extreme form is one type of venereal disease, a university news release said Thursday.

The new drug has been proven effective in tissue cultures and lab animals, where it has been found to be potent but non-toxic, the release said. It has been tested in Switzerland, the United States and England but further studies must be undertaken before the drug can be considered for human use.

U.S. price rise tops in 5 years

WASHINGTON (LAT) — U.S. wholesale prices, spurred by sharp increases for fuel and food, rose by 1.4 percent in September for the biggest monthly advance in almost five years.

The latest steep rise in the Department of Labor Producer Price Index signalled higher prices for consumers this fall and dashed President Carter's hopes for a slowdown in the 12 percent inflation rate in the closing months of 1979.

The index of prices paid to producers of basic goods has climbed by 11.8 percent over the past year and rose at a 15.7 percent rate in the last three months, the Department of Labor said.

The labor department also announced the unemployment rate dropped 5.8 per cent from six per cent in September.

McCarthy denies 'dirty tricks' link

McCARTHY
. . . 'innuendo'

Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy said Thursday she did not authorize the distribution of tape recordings which urge Social Credit supporters to play dirty when fighting the NDP for May 10 provincial election votes.

The tapes, made last year at a pre-election seminar for party workers, were commissioned by George Lenko, the minister's executive assistant.

Lenko refused to comment Thursday on whether he made the decision to distribute the tapes or whether he had instructions from Mrs. McCarthy.

On one tape, part of a three-cassette series on political tactics recorded in Vancouver Sept. 22, 1978, Jack Kelly, a party caucus researcher, tells constituency organizers that caucus staff "specialize in doing dirty things and we don't mind."

Kelly's actions are being investigated by caucus chairman Jack Kempf who told him to take his holidays a week early after reports he told a constituency meeting last month that Social Credit members should use false names to sign letters to the editor and manipulate the press.

Mrs. McCarthy, who spoke at the Vancouver meeting at which Kelly was recorded, said she never heard the tapes and did not know they existed until they were duplicated for distribution to party offices throughout B.C.

The minister, who is also deputy premier, said any attempt to link the tapes to her office is a masterpiece of innuendo.

She said if Lenko heard them, that is something the party must deal with and not something that should be laid at the government's doorstep.

Mrs. McCarthy said she has strong feelings about whether Kelly should be allowed to continue working as a party researcher and they will be conveyed to Kempf who is due to meet Kelly here on Tuesday. Kelly has refused to talk to reporters.

Party president Les Keen has said he was shocked by the advice to play dirty during the election campaign.

He said he was present at a seminar last fall when Kelly instructed party members on how to fake signatures on letters to newspapers but did nothing about it because he and other party members thought he was "speaking off the cuff."

"There was feedback about it instantly," Keen said. "They (party members) were amazed that instructions like this would be given.

"It was clearly evident to all there that there was disapproval."

However, on the tape recording, the audience is heard laughing and there are no objections to Kelly's statements on the tape.

Lung cancer blood test developed

VANCOUVER (CP) — A simple blood test to detect lung cancer now is undergoing trials at the University of British Columbia after 10 years of research.

It might take between 18 months to two years comparing results against other diagnostic methods but Dr. Julia Levy, the chief researcher and professor of microbiology, said Thursday she is cautiously optimistic.

If successful, the test might be used for general screening or to safeguard industrial workers. Dr. Levi said it would cost only pennies to do.

She and her team will have to show that the test is accurate and specific to cancer — and will not pick up ailments like chronic bronchitis and other lung disorders.

Dr. Levy adapted an extremely sensitive testing procedure to identify what the researchers consider to be a protein associated with lung tumors. The protein has also been found in the blood serum of some lung cancer patients.

Hydro project to dam Peace surprises gov't

B.C. Hydro's decision to go ahead with its Peace River Site C dam project came as a surprise to the provincial government, Environment Minister Rafe Mair said Thursday.

Mair also said in an interview he is concerned that the Crown utility made its announcement when the government is planning to change its dam site approval process.

Hydro announced this week it is applying for a water licence to build a 975-megawatt dam on the Peace River, seven kilometres southwest of Fort St. John.

"I'm a little concerned that Hydro made the announcement that they did in the way they did," said Mair. "And I'm quite surprised."

Under the current Water Act there is no statutory requirement to hold the hearings in public. The decision is left to Howard DeBeck, provincial water rights controller.

Meanwhile, at least 41 families comprising 157 people would have to relocate their homes if the dam is built, says Thurber Consultants Ltd., of Victoria, in a report prepared for B.C. Hydro.

In the past, forced relocation has proved to be a stressful and disruptive experience for most individuals while creating apprehension and a sense of powerlessness among them, says the report.

Thurber also says thousands of hectares of farmland and wildlife habitat and 64 historical sites, would be flooded if the project goes ahead.

However, it would create thousands of construction jobs and hundreds of related service jobs and inject about $70 million into the local economy, says the report.

The dam would create a reservoir covering 9,440 hectares and stretch about 80 kilometres along the valley floor. The flooded land would contain about 2,520 hectares of prime farmland or 17 per cent of the farmland in the Lower Peace River Valley. More than half, however, is not yet cultivated.

The potential agriculture production lost at Site C would range from $1 million to $7.5 million, but enough good agricultural land would be left to meet the demand for vegetables in northern B.C., the report says.

However, the report says flooding would result in permanent loss of much wildlife habitat, meaning 125 to 250 moose would leave the area along with 250 mule deer, 15 to 20 beaver colonies and 400 to 800 squirrels be lost.

The 64 sites known for historic or archeological interest that would be flooded include fur trading posts Rocky Mountain Fort and Rocky Mountain Portage House and some prehistoric sites.

Cameras appear, backlog vanishes

VANCOUVER (CP) — It is true that the post office ships mail from Vancouver to as far away as Kamloops and has to bring back pieces destined for Vancouver to deliver them.

But it's not true that the post office did this last week so television cameramen would not have a huge backlog to record, Fred Morley, public relations officer for the post office, said Thursday in response to charges by the Canadian Union of Postal Workers.

The latest labor-management uproar in the post office here began Sept. 27 when local union president, Evert Hoogers, said there was a staffing crisis that could lead to a major confrontation.

BCTV asked for permission to film the mail processing work and got approval to do so the following day.

On Tuesday, Phyllis Webb told the Vancouver and District Labor Council that a huge backlog that would have supported the union charges about manning cutbacks disappeared like magic, only to re-appear after the cameramen had filmed an ordinary operation.

She said that the backlog was shipped to the Victoria, New Westminster, Kamloops and Kelowna post offices to get it out of sight.

Morley said 128,000 pieces of mail from the United States were trucked only to New Westminster for sorting. However, he confirmed that if mail piles up in the Vancouver post office it is shipped as far away as Interior cities if these locations can handle it.

"By shipping it out we can maximize our capabilities," Morley said, adding that mail carrying Vancouver area addresses has to be brought back here for delivery.

Mair backs fish licence

Environment Minister Rafe Mair said Thursday he agrees to the federal proposal of a salt-water sports fishing licence on two conditions.

The first condition, he said, is that the licence fees be invested in the salmonid enhancement program. The second condition would require commercial fishermen to put money into the program.

Lame excuses

Depending on the reasons, there may be no shame in losing a billion dollar deal. But the reasons why Canada lost the latest round of nuclear reactor negotiations with Argentina are not defensible. Both the hardline human rights advocates and the business factions have tasted defeat.

The president of Atomic Energy Canada Ltd. claimed it was Canadian government indecision over nuclear safeguards that botched the $1.5 billion contract. He suggested that the bid failed because Canada had changed the rules for nuclear safeguards twice during construction of first CANDU reactor in Argentina.

An official with Canatom Inc. of Montreal, one of the companies involved in the deal, said that External Affairs Minister Flora Macdonald's recent references to the lack of human rights in Argentina contributed to Canada losing out to a West German company.

It might have been acceptable if Canada had lost the sale for moral reasons. Champions of human rights and anti-nuclear policy could have interpreted the result as justified.

Instead we hear that the CANDU was dumped because of government fuzziness over how to prevent reactor by-products being used for non-peaceful purposes and over how far to go in using export policy to promote human rights in foreign nations.

But a wavering policy is only part of the problem. The first secretary of the Argentine embassy in Ottawa has downplayed Canadian nuclear officials' excuses of safeguards and human rights. He has strongly implied that his country's experience with Canada in actually getting a facility built was far from satisfactory.

The CANDU reactor now under construction in Argentina has been plagued by construction delays and cost overruns. Although the contract has been renegotiated in favor of Canada, AECL is still expected to lose money. The reactor won't be in operation until at least 1982 — two years behind schedule.

While the Canadian firms involved in CANDU construction were quick to lay the blame on political folly, their performance is open to criticism.

Again, it would have been acceptable if we'd lost the deal because the CANDU was inferior or more expensive than our competitor's model. But the CANDU is $500 million cheaper than the West Germany product, and deemed to have many advantages.

The Clark government may argue with justification that the former Liberal regime created an unstable political climate in which to sell nuclear reactors. The need for the government to clarify Canadian policy for all prospective CANDU buyers is obvious.

It shouldn't happen again

Victoria Mayor Mike Young is taking a sensible attitude towards the unfortunate case in which a seriously injured girl was kept in city jail cells for seven hours.

Young has said he is not interested in laying blame on any individual in this particular case, but he wants to ensure it will not happen again. To that end, he will ask the police board, of which he is chairman, to have the police department review its procedures for detecting illness or injury among persons in its jail.

These procedures seem to be the key to the whole matter.

Everyone agrees the 15-year-old girl, a runaway from Metchosin camp, had fallen from a bicycle while being chased by police. Everyone agrees that the girl had vomited while in jail. Depending on whose version of the story is being told, she may or may not have also complained of a serious headache.

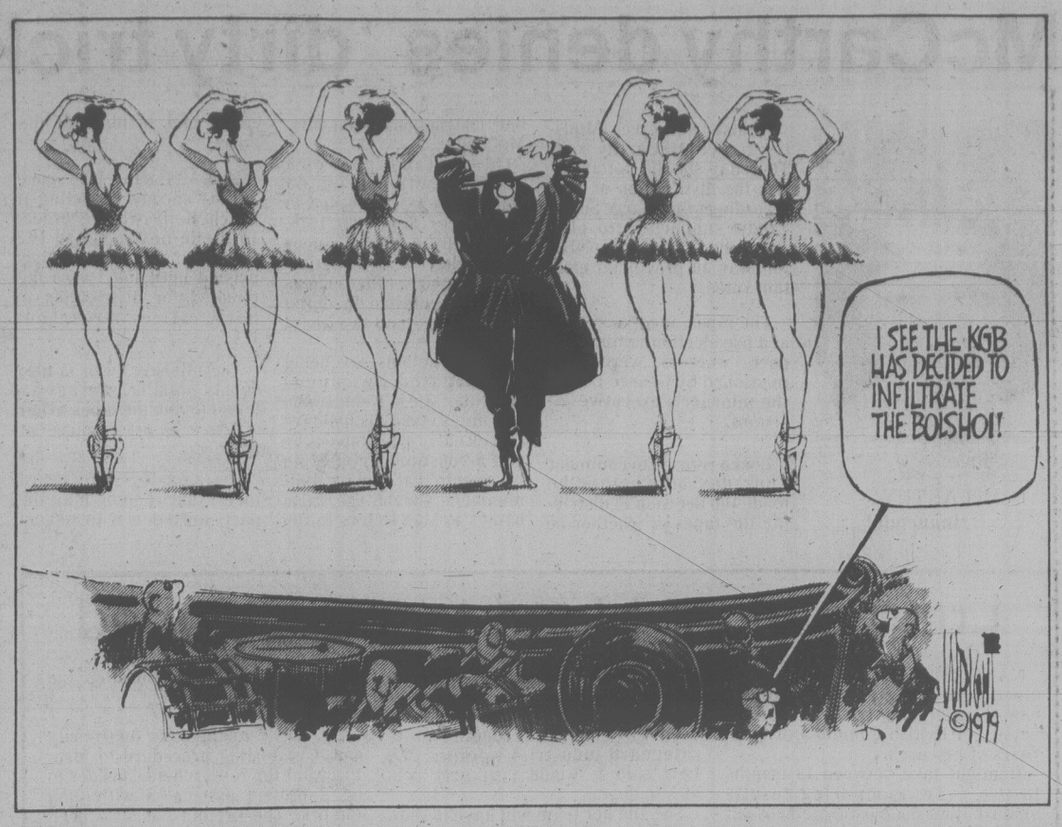
Everyone agrees that nothing was done for her until she was taken to court the next morning. And everyone agrees that when her social worker did then take her to hospital, she was found to be suffering from a fractured skull and broken collarbone.

The police department says the girl's symptoms were consistent with her being drunk or on drugs, and that is why the injury was not spotted. Yet anyone with minimal first aid training knows that it is often a sign of serious trouble when a person begins vomiting after receiving a blow to the head. A doctor should be called immediately.

Did the officers in the jail not have the basic first aid training to know this? Or had communications broken down so they did not know the girl had fallen from the bicycle earlier?

A review of procedures should ensure both that jail officers have the skills to know when medical attention is needed, and that communications are precise enough that the jail staff will always be told any circumstances that would help them in dealing with an inmate.

The story is not a pretty one under any circumstances, though it has a happy ending because the girl is recovering. A proper review of procedures, and the implementation of changes where necessary, as suggested by Young, should ensure that it is a story never told again.



ROBERT LEKACHMAN

Why it all may go wrong

Robert Lekachman is professor of economics at Lehman College of the City University of New York.

For the excellent reason that the stock market has, for several years, been in the doldrums, anniversary "freaks" need not fear a replay of 1929, the Great Crash. These days the speculative action centers on gold and silver.

Unfortunately, no similar guarantee can be reasonably offered against a deep, global depression reminiscent of the bleak 1930s — a much graver threat. What was lost in the Great Crash was merely money. The Great Depression cost millions of Americans and Europeans homes, jobs, savings, farms and self- esteem.

Poised for breakdown

In 1979, the international economy is as delicately poised for breakdown as it was half a century earlier. The economic historian Charles P. Kindleberger summarized the 1929 situation as one in which "Germany owes reparations to Britain and France and commercial debts to the United States; Britain owes to the United States about what it receives from Germany, and is owed war debts from France; France is to receive the lion's share of reparations, well in excess of its war debts to Britain and the United States."

No American leader admitted that Allied war debts owed to the United States were linked in fact, though not in law, to the continued flow of German reparations to France and England. Nor did politicians and bankers concede that the only way the Germans could pay up was with funds borrowed from America. As soon as the Americans tired of pumping capital into Germany, the Germans were certain to default on their reparations and the British and French shortly afterward on their obligations to the United States. When all of these possibilities materialized, mutual reprisals and recriminations promptly poisoned the atmosphere and sabotaged recovery efforts here and in Europe and smoothed Hitler's path to power.

It is fortunate that neither war debts nor reparations now complicate international relations. But as a substitute, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' 1973 energy revolution is nearly as menacing.

This year, the United States' oil-import bill will be approximately $80 billion larger than it was a mere six years ago. The World Bank estimates the 1979 trade deficit of developing countries without oil at $42 billion, rising in 1980 to $50 billion or $55 billion, if OPEC, against the current probabilities, refrains from yet another turn of the price screw. This year's 60 percent increase has already added $77 billion to world energy costs.

Up to now, all parties have financed oil imports without actual calamity mainly because OPEC has recycled many of its $60 billion annual surplus as deposits in Chase, Citibank and other money-market institutions, and they in turn have extended large loans to third-world borrowers.

These commercial credits are an indispensable complement to the inadequate efforts of international agencies. This year, the World Bank's $10 billion of loans to developing countries met only a fifth of their aggregate deficit, and continuation of aid even on this meager scale is threatened by a House of Representatives vote to withhold American contributions to the World Bank if any part of the loans assist Cuba or Vietnam.

During the 1920s, World War I's winners excluded the German exports that might have financed reparations. In our time, the rich countries seem equally reluctant to allow third-world merchandise to swamp consumer markets and imperil domestic jobs and profits. Under the circumstances, new loans are as essential to keep the Third World afloat as they were to prop up the German economy half a century ago.

Glum possibilities are numerous. American banks may decide to swallow their losses and pull out of the poorer parts of the Third World. Large debtors may default. On either political or economic grounds, OPEC may withdraw deposits from Western banks. One or more of the latter might close its doors. Any of these events and their repercussions would severely test the adaptive capacities of central banks, governments and international agencies.

Weak efforts

Most such calamities of conjecture never occur. Such consolation as this platitude conveys should be tempered by the weakness of cooperative efforts to resolve foreseeable problems. In the next decade, the world's economic health hinges upon two sets of difficult choices. Will the developed nations set aside intramural squabbles and involve common responses to OPEC and the remainder of the Third World? Will OPEC, the globe's nouveaux riches, begin to price its elixir with the restraint appropriate to a novel role as a dominant creditor?

It is barely possible that just as the imminent prospect of execution powerfully concentrates a man's mind, looming economic disorder will have opened a degree of international cooperation hitherto unprecedented. Don't bet your last ingot on human rationality.

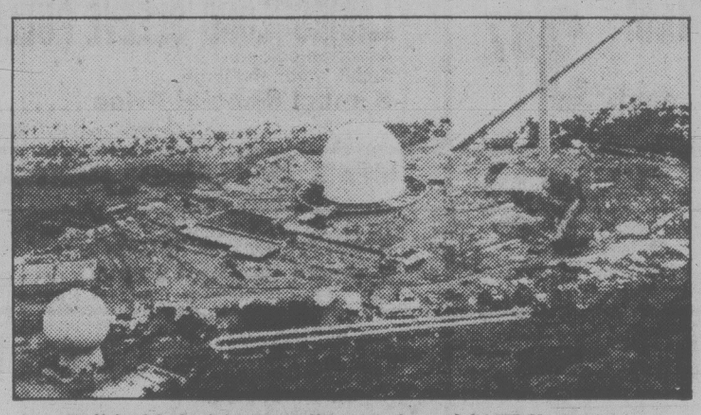
RICHARD GWYN

Doing good — for whom?

OTTAWA — "The Buddha is smiling". Because he once did, Canada's nuclear energy industry has never since smiled.

On May 18, 1974, Indian scientists sent that four-word telegram to their then Prime Minister, Indira Ghandi. A day later, Mrs. Ghandi announced that a "peaceful nuclear device" had been exploded in the Rajasthan desert. A few weeks later, the Canadian government admitted that the plutonium for the device, which added India to the nuclear club (the U.S., Russia, Britain, France, China) had come from a Canadian reactor.

Ever since, we've tried to make certain that we would not be the cause of it happening again. But we've tried at the same time to sell all the nuclear reactor sales that we could. In Argentina, where we've just lost a $2 billion order for a nuclear reactor and a heavy water plant, the link between the parallel policies of trying to do good for others and of trying to do good for ourselves has finally, but inevitably, snapped.



Political indecision contributes to loss of CANDU contract.

Trouble with Brazil

One policy, had it been followed, ought never have taken us to Argentina at all. The trouble there isn't just the military regime. The trouble, as much, is Brazil. The two countries compete for hegemony in South America. Both have refused to sign the Non-Proliferation Treaty, by which countries commit themselves never to acquire The Bomb.

Even Argentina's commitment to nuclear energy is suspect. It is 92 per cent self-sufficient in oil. It possesses prime, undeveloped hudro-power sites. It is poor. Yet it is undertaking a $10 billion nuclear energy program.

As suspect, this program is based upon the Canadian-designed (CANDU) system of natural uranium and of heavy water; countries equipped with this type of reactor — South Korea is an example — free themselves of dependence upon the U.S. and Europe for supplies of enriched uranium. By acquiring, as it will by this contract, both a reactor and a heavy water plant, Argentina will acquire a "full fuel system" — that is, self-sufficiency.

The other policy, had it been followed, ought to have won us the contract. Already, we are building a CANDU-type reactor in Argentina. The successful bid by a West German-Swiss consortium is higher by $500 million.

Ross Campbell, head of international sales for Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. has blamed the lost sale — "the whole world expected us to get it" — on, in general, the Clark government for not providing enough support, and on, in particular, Flora MacDonald, both for naming Argentina as a violator of human rights in a press interview and for calling for tighter nuclear safeguards in her speech at the United Nations.

Campbell is a mouthy guy. In 1969, as ambassador to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), he attacked publically the Trudeau government for cutting back our defence contingents in Europe.

Like most mouthy people, Campbell mixes some sound sense and a good deal of nonsense.

MacDonald's contribution is the easiest to measure. It was nil. She spoke last Tuesday. The Argentine President signed the 26-page statement of decision last Friday, four days later, it just is not credible that anything MacDonald said made any difference.

In fact, the statement of decision blames Atomic Energy for the lost contract. It cites "technical problems" and "construction delays" in the completion of Atomic Energy's current CANDU reactor in Argentina. This analysis, Campbell, when I asked him, dismissed as "a pseudo-technical explanation for what obviously was a political decision."

Here, at last, Campbell is talking sense. The political decision that mattered, though, was taken, not in Buenos Aires, but in Ottawa. And it was a non-decision.

Hawks and doves

Through the summer, Clark's cabinet divided between, as an insider describes it, "those who wanted to put the reactor on the next plane and never ask for payment, and those who didn't want to sell it at all, even if they paid us in advance, in gold." MacDonald, as you'd expect, led the doves; International Trade Minister Mike Wilson and Trade and Commerce Minister Bob de Cotret headed the flight of hawks.

The hawks won. Sort of. Wilson flew south to say how eager we were to do business. At the same time, as evidence that our eagneress was muted, we insisted upon stricter safeguards than did West Germany — so-called "full-scope" controls which would apply not just to Canada's reactors but all nuclear installations in Argentina.

Though the price is high, the Clark government now has been taught the lesson that it cannot both do good to ourselves and for others — not, certainly, at the same time in the same country. Since the particular country is Argentina, we're better off to have tried to do good for others. At least, when one day, the telegram reaches Buenos Aires that, "a peaceful nuclear devices" has just been successfully exploded, the first translation will be from Spanish to German.

Resource rights

On May 22 the Canadian citizens 19 years and older were urged to exercise their democratic right to vote for a candidate of their choice in the federal election. When all the ballots were counted a minority government of a slightly different political stripe emerged as the winner, and all assumed that democratic justice had again been carried out.

Ironically this election coincided with the Year of the Child for recognition of childrens' rights throughout the world and therein lies the anomaly within our democratic system. The minority government was elected, in part, on the promise to give more autonomy to the provinces over their land resource rights and extend these rights to offshore resources. Also promised was the return of the economically viable portion of federal Crown corporations in resource exploration and development to the free-enterprise sector.

Unfortunately these energy and mineral resources which the free-enterprising provinces and corporations are scrambling to exploit, are finite resources necessary to keep our high-energy industrial society functioning. More seriously, these short supply finite resources are not all our own. Within this century of wasteful exploitation and end-use, our free-enterprise society has consumed more than their fair share, making no provision for the needs of oncoming generations.

However the under-19 children, who comprise 39 per cent of the present population, and their descendants, are denied a voice in our democratic electoral system at all levels of decision making and cannot defend themselves against the onslaught. Therefore it is now encumbent upon the adult population to enact legislation to provide a guarantee against the exploitation of their share of the finite resources.

Because it is impractical to extend suffrage to two-fifths of our citizens, our children, then legislative action should be taken to protect their rights to resources. It would appear that the only course open is the establishment of a finite-resources-heritage reserve wherein 50 per cent of all proven finite resources will be physically left in-situ under the guardianship of the Supreme Court of Canada. Application for withdrawal would be dependent upon proof of the need in emergency and the decision for release would require the concurrence of the Supreme Court of Canada. — J. J. Gibson, 103-260 Michigan.

True confederation

In a recent Times column, Richard Gwyn writes " 'sovereignty association', whatever it is that means," and it must be admitted that the majority of Canadians are likely to agree, although it has always puzzled me why this should be so.

Some of the confusion probably arises from our references to the "Fathers of Confederation" or "Confederation debates," for this country is not now and never has been one, if Webster's dictionary is to be believed. It defines confederation as "a body of independent states more or less permanently united for joint action" and that is precisely what Rene Levesque means by sovereignty-association. Under it there would be an independent Quebec and an independent Canada (minus Quebec) for which the Quebec premier seeks joint action in certain restricted spheres such as banking, currency, intercontinental railways and the like. It would be much like the Common Market arrangement in Europe but on a smaller scale.

Aside altogether from the fact that Quebec has no legal right to leave the union (so described throughout our constitution), two objections at once suggest themselves: 1) Would it be fair to equate Quebec's power with that of nine other provinces? 2) With Canada and Quebec having an equal say in joint endeavors, would they ever agree on anything? — F. L. P. Anderson, 409-2174 Cadboro Bay Road.

Turncoats

Re: The recent articles on Joe Clark's wooing members of the other parties over to his side of the House of Commons:

While Mr. Clark acknowledges that patronage will play a major part in his plan for acquiring either enough Conservatives for a majority or obtaining a respectable "francophone" representation, I feel that there is something fundamentally wrong. Before the federal election we were bombarded with commercials and advertisements urging us to vote for the party which we felt would most benefit Canada as a central government . . . a strong party.

But with Mr. Clark's "The price is right" schemes, the person that we elected into parliament representing their party for the betterment of this country, can simply change doctrines to facilitate Mr. Clark's goal of majority government.

I think it's time that the people of Canada awoke to the fact that his actions tear at every fibre of our so called democratic way of life. How audacious of Mr. Clark to interfere. And if we must have political turncoats, let them show their insecurity before we elect them.

Mr. Clark might well get his majority government in the end, but that was not the way this country voted. I urge everyone who feels likewise to contact their MP. It was your vote. — Marc Monsarrat, 1547 Foul Bay Road.

STRAY FEATHERS

Vultures put on show

For a couple of days late last month, the skies over the Saanich Peninsula must have looked a bit like those over England during the last war, just before a raid by Bomber Command. I say 'must have' because I didn't see the great event, but enough other people did that we've got a pretty good picture of just what did happen.

Before my "Bomber Command" analogy gets away from me, let me put your minds at ease; the spectacle last month had nothing to do with bombers. On the other hand, it had a lot to do with large, dark, identified, flying objects — Turkey Vultures, to be precise.

Now it may come as a bit of a surprise to some, to hear that there are any vultures — avian-type, that is — on Vancouver Island, let alone enough of them to constitute a spectacle, but the fact is there are vultures here and, if the results of September's tally are indicative, there's enough of them to make one look up with wonder and even awe.

At this point, too, I should clear up the reason why September is so important in this story. First, when the Turkey Vultures are scattered thinly over this island — as they are for most of the summer — they could easily go unnoticed. Second, when they gather together for their annual fall journey south, it's difficult not to notice them.

The story of this year's migration — which may not be over yet — comes from Peggy Goodwill. (Peggy and her husband, Vic, run Victoria's Rare Bird Alert.) According to Peg, the first sign that the 1979 movement of Turkey Vultures was under way came on September 11 when 12 of the big birds were seen soaring over Sansom Narrows.

For the next 10 days, scattered reports from other places around the southern tip of Vancouver Island indicated that the flight was continuing, but no large numbers were seen.

Then came September 24 and 25, when sunny skies, warm air, and light winds combined to produce ideal conditions for Turkey Vultures. On those two days, with the help of rising air from the warm land, more than 700 vultures were sighted by observers from Pedder Bay to the Gulf Islands.

By examining all the reports, and sifting out those that possibly represent the same group of birds — also not ignoring the possibility that the milling masses of birds on both days represented the same concentration — we still have to accept the fact that at least 400 Turkey Vultures spent part of those two days over the Saanich Peninsula.

Tracing the movements of one group — kept under observation by Vic and Peggy themselves — it is possible to appreciate how the confusion of numbers can arise. Vic and Peg spotted 98 over Clover Point early on the 25th. For the most part, this group just seemed to mill around over the Point, only occasionally drifting off toward Gonzales Hill.

At about 11 a.m. this group was joined by another 60, and together they spent a few minutes over the hill before setting a course for Discovery Island. Setting a similar course were the Goodwills.

Seven minutes later the Goodwills were at Oak Bay and searching the sky over Discovery. At first they didn't see anything. Then, as their eyes grew accustomed to the glare, they began to spot the vultures. Counting the milling, twisting mass of birds as best they could, the Goodwills came up with the staggering total of more than 200!

About the same time the Goodwills were following their flock, there were other reports of 70 in Fairfield, 56 in Brentwood and 30 at Swan Lake. Instead of adding 150 to the Goodwills' count, it seems more likely that these were, or ultimately became, part of the great flock over Discovery.

While there will always be doubts about just how many Turkey Vultures pass this way each fall, you'll get unanimous agreement among local birdwatchers that these great sailplanes put on one of the best air shows of the season hereabouts.

Drug plague hits Japan youth

GEOFFREY MURRAY

TOKYO — "I did it because I wanted to go to prison."

So said the 17-year-old girl, dazed and disorientated through drug abuse, after being arrested for stabbing to death a total stranger.

To police, this bizarre incident was merely confirmation of what they had feared, with the increasingly free use of amphetamines by young Japanese.

The stimulant drug plague has taken this country by storm, with drugs pouring in from manufacturing centres in South Korea, Taiwan, the Philippines and Hong Kong, often run by Japanese gangster groups.

The National Police Agency reported 15,856 stimulant drug cases detected in the first half of this year, up 9.2 per cent over the same period last year, but perhaps merely the tip of the iceberg.

At the present rate, this year will be the worst for drugs since the opium boom in the chaotic early postwar years which culminated in an all-time record of 53,221 cases in 1954.

Police last year seized a record 218 pounds of smuggled stimulants, but estimate that two to three tons of drugs are coming into the country each year undetected.

These drugs currently provide the underworld with one of its most lucrative sources of income. Bars and discos are the most common outlets for the "retail trade."

The drug problem has grown during a period of unprecedented affluence in Japan and is considered a serious threat to public security.

Police are particularly alarmed at the rapid spread of the drug culture among schoolchildren.

The number of minors arrested in the first half of this year totalled 831, up 36.5 per cent from a year earlier. The total for the whole of 1978 was 1,423, which was a 74.4 per cent increase from 1977.

Most children start off sniffing paint thinner and glue for kicks and then graduate to amphetamine addiction.

High school girls often are introduced to the drug culture by delinquents and gangsters they become acquainted with at discos and coffee shops.

The gangs, in fact, operate a highly effective addict-recruiting system using younger, more handsome members as lures. Once hooked, many of the girls agree to become prostitutes to maintain their habit — providing yet another source of income for the gangs.

Many boys first try the drug when they join the extremely popular Hell's Angels-style hot rod groups.

In some cases, girls have been forcibly injected with drugs, and this year there has been a rash of cases which involved teen-age girls who died as a result.

Officials are concerned about use of the stimulants, which they say can cause hallucinations, aberrations and make people violent.

Although no separate figures are available, police say there is a detectable increase in violence associated with drug addiction.

Police and education authorities now are attempting to find out the causes of the present drug boom, which they see somehow as a failure of the education system to create a proper sense of values and individual worth, as well as a collapse of close parental supervision.

A survey of nearly 5,000 stimulant drug offenders by the National Police Agency found that 42 per cent began the drug habit out of sheer curiosity or boredom. Other main reasons were for "kicks" during sex or gambling, and a desire to show off to friends.

Some 80 per cent said they were introduced to drugs by gangsters. Although 90 per cent of the addicts wished to get off drugs, officials say so far the rate of permanent cures is depressingly small.

As a result, the police agency has issued a booklet for distribution to schools detailing all the horrors of drug addiction through the case histories of addicts ranging in age from 8 to late teens.

It makes horrifying reading, and police hope the shock effect will bring good results. At the same time they have stepped up patrols in major entertainment districts around the country to try to spot addicts early, while urging parents to keep a closer watch on their children for tell-tale changes in personality.

But a senior agency official admitted that in battling the drug craze, "It's going to be a long, hard struggle, and unless we can somehow stop the smugglers, it's next to impossible to eradicate."

Into the wild blue yonder

By MEL GILDEN

HOLLYWOOD — In a new movie from Warner Brothers, Time After Time, H.G. Wells pursues Jack the Ripper from Victorian England to San Francisco of the year 1979. Without a machine in which the two protagonists can travel through time, most of the action wouldn't have been possible.

But what about the possibility of real time travel? Can a person physically transport himself faster than the ordinary flow of time or even turn around and buck the flow altogether?

Even without a fancy machine, everybody travels in time. We travel backward in memory and forward in expectation. We travel forward in time from our birth to the moment of our death.

But what is time, exactly? Its oldest and most persistent metaphor is the river, flowing endlessly onward, past to future, without eddy or falls. The Mayas thought time was cyclic, repeating itself every 260 years. Today, scientists see time in a relativistic, Einsteinian way that weaves it into the warp of the universe with space as the woof.

Most of these modern explanations, however, are too complicated to be understood without great study. Two easier answers that are no less correct come from science fiction writers Robert Bloch and Ray Cummings.

Bloch's definition is part of a famous trilogy:

Space — a lot of nothing between stuff.

Matter — The only difference between a real elephant and a pink one.

Time — There ain't nothing longer than.

Up till the last few years, real time travel was thought to be impossible. On a list of difficult things to do that includes achieving immortality, invisibility and levitation, Arthur Clarke listed time travel as the least likely to become a reality.

However, since the discovery of black holes and the postulation of the tachyon, possibilities for real time travel pop out of mathematical equations with a regularity that is alarming to diehard doubters.

A black hole is a region in space where a star has collapsed in on itself, and, weighing many tons to the cubic inch, it generates such a strong gravitational field that even light itself — the fastest thing in the Universe — cannot escape after falling within a certain distance. If one were to pass through such a hole, the equations say it is not impossible that a space voyager would actually travel in time.

Tachyons are sub-atomic particles that not only travel faster than light, they cannot move slower. The speed of light still is a barrier, but at the bottom, rather than at the top. Though no tachyons actually have been discovered, the relativistic mathematics do not forbid them. If one could hook a clock to a tachyon and watch it as it went by, the clock would seem to be running backward.

Even if all this were not so, the mere impossibility of time travel wouldn't stop people from thinking and writing about it. Not only is it a fascinating concept, it is a useful device for transporting the modern hero back among the dinosaurs, or for allowing invaders from the future to attack our contemporary world.

But care must be taken. Nobody knows how real time travel works — despite the theories — so writers can make up their own rules. However, such freedom should not be a licence to generate chaos. Once a writer makes up a rule, he must play fair with his reader or viewer by sticking to it. Otherwise, the time machine becomes just an excuse to perpetrate a series of dramatic coincidences wrought by a device that is just as unsatisfactory as any other deus ex machina.

Every major science fiction TV show (and most of the minor ones) has tried to tell a time travel story at least once.

Better time-travel stories were to be had on shows like "Twilight Zone," "Star Trek" and 'The Outer Limits."

In the movies, time-travel of an elementary sort was a subject as early as 1901 in the first version of Dickens' A Christmas Carol. This rarely is thought of as a time-travel story, but consider the Ghost of Christmas Past who shows Scrooge the way things were, and the Ghost of Christmas yet to Come, who shows Scrooge the way things might be in the future.

In 1949, Bing Crosby starred in A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court, Mark Twain's story of a man who travels back to the time of King Arthur by means of a blow on the head. Once again, hardly a scientific treatment of the subject.

Twain's original novel first was published in 1889, only six years before the publication of the short novel that many consider to be not only the first scientific treatment of fictional time travel but one of the great classics of literature: H.G. Wells' The Time Machine.

Wells, following the lead of contemporary scientists, thought of time as just another kind of space — an idea proven mathematically by Einstein only a few years later. Just as a modern person can overcome gravity by rising in a balloon, Wells proposed that he could, with the proper vehicle, plow through the barrier of time.

Though the hero in the novel was unnamed, in the 1960 movie version he was called George, and a plate on the control panel of his machine read "Manufactured by H. George Wells."

In Time After Time, Wells, this time played by Malcolm McDowell, again becomes the hero of a story involving time travel. He uses his machine to pursue Jack the Ripper into the future. Spectacular and effective special effects characterize the machine's operation.

Next year will see the release of Universal's Somewhere in Time, a story about a man whose time-travel device is his own mind — an intriguing concept, and perhaps an idea with even greater possibilities than Mr. Wells' machine.

Time travel is one of the great "What if . . ." fantasies. It allows us to undo old mistakes and get results without waiting. It allows us to watch anachronistic elements in conflict. It lets us escape to where others cannot follow. Though it may never really happen, time travel is too good a thing to leave alone. One doesn't need a time machine to know that its fictional future, at least, is assured.

WORKERS' COMPENSATION.

NOT USING IT COULD COST YOUR BUSINESS A BUNDLE.

With all the other problems of operating a small business, it's sometimes easy to put off or overlook the responsibility of ensuring that your business is protected by the Workers' Compensation Board.

And that could be one of the most expensive omissions you ever made.

Because, if one of your workers is involved in an on-the-job accident, you would be liable for the entire cost of his injuries and rehabilitation—a cost that could be many times that of compensation coverage.

Don't risk it. A simple phone call or visit to any W.C.B. office will give you all the information you need about compulsory or elective coverage. You'll find that, for a small cost, you can buy a big piece of "peace of mind".

EMPLOYEES: if you're not sure about your coverage, discuss this ad with your employer or call the Assessment Department in your nearest W.C.B. office.

Royal facelift gets support, but no money

A $2.3 million restoration of Royal Theatre is okay as long as somebody else — like the provincial government — pays for it, Saanich council decided Thursday.

During a special meeting aldermen said they are unwilling to commit a large amount of money to the project.

However, approval in principal was granted by Saanich on the condition the provincial and possibly federaly governments provide substantial grants.

Aldermen said they don't mind if the Royal Theatre committee continues exploring the possibility of turning the Royal into a cultural centre for lower Vancouver Island.

But they also insisted on a referendum when Saanich's share of the cost is determined.

The three-member theatre committee, Victoria Ald. Ron McKenzie, former Oak Bay ald. John Gault and Saanich Ald. Howard Sturrock, agreed to the conditions.

Saanich Ald. Mary Casilio said she would like to see the provincial government pick up 90 per cent of the costs of extensive internal and external work, the addition of 55 seats and construction a two-storey foyer.

The improvements are recommended in a report by local theatre expert Allan Purdy, who said the old facility could be transformed into a major performing arts centre that would attract artists Victoria doesn't normally see.

Gault called the Greater Victoria area a cultural backwater and said renovating the Royal would bring the area prestige and be good for the tourist trade.

But aldermen said they are reluctant to get into the entertainment business, especially a venture established in the downtown core.

Ald. Irene Block said she will only approve the project if the provincial government pays the entire cost.

"Arts and culture has taken on the color of a sacred cow — if you're not for it, it's like you're against motherhood," Block said, adding Victoria and not Saanich or any other municipality gains from the venture.

Block said Saanich's decision to become partners with Victoria and Oak Bay and buy the Royal several years ago was a backward step.

"We are a bedroom community, not a tourist attraction. People pass through. I can't see that there is any percentage in increasing Saanich's rather large investment in the city of Victoria to an even greater degree," Block said.

Ald. John Mika said since the downtown area will receive additional benefits, it should pay more of the costs.

Mika said he wants to see more information on the costs of the renovation and called the $2.3 million figure stated in Purdy's report "only an educated guess."

But he said a performing arts centre would be good for the tourist trade and Saanich had a civic responsibility to continue the study.

Gault said Saanich has much to gain from the renovation of the Royal because the quality of local entertainment will improve considerably.

Between $40,000 and $60,000 would be spent annually to subsidize appearances by top attractions, Gault said.

He said the Royal was a charming Edwardian building gently crumbling into decay before $600,000 worth of upgrading earlier this year.

The upgrading was good business sense because now the three owner municipalities have a fantastic asset, Gault said.

But the theatre still lacks proper sound and lighting equipment and Victorians have to pay more for tickets because promotors have to cover those extra costs.

Gault said the provincial government has indicated it will fund a large part of the restoration cost but will not contribute toward a new 2,500-seat theatre.

"The provincial government is not interested in pouring millions of dollars into a very large structure."

Facilities like Vancouver's Queen Elizabeth Theatre aren't created without substantial capital expenditures and large annual deficits.

However the restored Royal will be a money-making venture, Gault promised.

Ald. would clip hawkers' wings

Mayoralty candidate Ald. Murray Glazier wants the street hawkers off the streets next year.

In a position paper he titled Hawkers to go Begging, Glazier said the sidewalk vendors of food and drink on the Causeway in front of The Empress haven't met the expectations raised when the bylaw went through two years ago.

"With one or two exceptions, we have shabby carts, unkempt vendors and unimaginative offerings. They are an annoyance and a nuisance to tourists and residents."

Glazier's alternative is to invite the Intercultural Society, which runs the successful Folkfest every spring, to operate food stands and provide ethnic music on the lower Causeway in the vicinity of Ship Point.

The alderman said the hawkers had been given a fair chance by the city.

"We believed the proposals. We accommodated them. We didn't limit their numbers.

"I'm sorry the hawkers didn't work out."

Nurses: Will gov't get signal?

The provincial government and Health Labor Relations Association should be concerned about a recent representation vote at Gorge Road Hospital, a spokesman for the Registered Nurses Association of B.C. said Thursday.

"What it indicates is that things have to get better for nurses," Jerry Miller said in an interview.

A group of Gorge Road registered nurses, upset with conditions at the hospital and with their collective agreement, in August took out membership in the Hospital Employees Union.

The union applied for certification and the Labor Relations Board ordered a representation vote.

On Wednesday, the nurses voted by a 53-per-cent margin to stay with RNABC.

Miller said on the face of it the vote may look close but it is his understanding that when the move to HEU was made in August, most of the nurses were in favor.

"Clearly, with time to reflect, many of them decided such a move was not in their best interests."

He said the RNABC was naturally concerned with the situation at the Gorge but that concern should be shared.

He said the government and the hospitals' bargaining agency, the Health Labor Relations Association, should get the message that nurses are not happy with the way the hospitals are being run.

Mayor hobbled by unity lack on commission

The uncertain future of Greater Victoria's economic development commission makes it difficult selecting a commissioner to succeed Barry Mayhew, Mayor Mel Couvelier of Saanich said Wednesday.

Mayhew resigned effective Oct. 31 after he learned the present commission is being dissolved and that the Capital Region District wants to take over.

Saanich recently approved a bylaw transfering commission control from the private sector to the CRD.

But the CRD bylaw has yet to be approved by other municipalities.

Some are unwilling to endorse the transfer and their reluctance is creating problems, Couvelier said.

He is chairman of the CRD economic development committee.

The committee would like to see a new commissioner chosen by the end of November from a short list of applicants prepared by the development commission.

But lack of unity "could have a drastic effect" on the selection process, Couvelier said.

Some promising candidates don't want to commit themselves until they know what they're getting into.

Couvelier said the CRD development committee is having trouble convincing Oak Bay and Central Saanich to go along with the idea of a regionally controlled commission.

Sidney, North Saanich and Esquimalt are waiting to see what the other municipalities do.

Only Saanich has agreed to the transfer of power.

A regionally controlled development commission would remove the element of competition between municipalities for industry, Couvelier said.

Sooke couldn't wait any longer and has created its own development commission, but promised to participate with the regional district commission, he said.

The new commissioner will be under the control of CRD executive director Dennis Young and will work with regional staff and equipment, including a sophisticated computer.

All Mayhew had was "an office and some paper clips," Couvelier said.

He said since municipalities contribute to the commission's budget they should have some control over it.

The new commission will be an 11-member board made up of seven representatives appointed by member municipalities and four appointed jointly by the CRD.

Couvelier hopes it will be ready to take over by the end of the year.

The present commission, made up of a a number of business groups, is disbanding because the provincial goverment is going to end its 50 per cent contribution to the $60,000 budget.

Economic Development Minister Don Phillips indicated funding could continue if the commission comes under regional control, Couvelier said.

Mayor Brown calls it quits

LAKE COWICHAN — Mayor Bert Brown announced Wednesday he won't run for re-election.

The 58-year-old logging contractor, who has been mayor six years, said he felt he has served too long.

"Maybe I'll go to work, get a job. I'm running out of things to do."

During his terms the Lake Cowichan arena was built, a sewer system installed, incinerator built and a park established.

That pain in the back...

maybe it's trying to tell you something.
Maybe it's saying you should be more careful when you're lifting—that you should make sure the load isn't too heavy, and that you lift with your legs instead of your back.
Maybe it's complaining about the way you twist when you turn instead of shifting your feet and turning with your whole body.

It might even be saying that you should take a little time now and then to do some simple exercises to strengthen your back.
Think about it. And do something about it. For a start, how about getting a copy of the free booklet "BACK TALK" Available at your local Workers' Compensation Board office or mail this coupon.

Prentice throws in towel after winning round

By NORMAN GIDNEY

Terry Prentice finally won a round Thursday night in the three-month controversy surrounding him as chairman of the board of Royal Jubilee Hospital.

But it was only a moral victory.

The board voted 5-4 in a special meeting to reject a motion of non-confidence — with Prentice casting the tie-breaker — but Prentice said that for the good of the hospital he won't run for the job again. His term expires in three weeks, although he will remain as a board member.

Ever calm and cool amid the heated charges that have swirled around him, Prentice recorded his swan song for the evening television news Thursday afternoon but didn't inform the board until halfway through the meeting.

Prentice explained his decision in an interview at the end of the meeting: "It's a confrontation that centres around me and that confrontation isn't good for the hospital. So for the good of the hospital I decided to resign."

Former chairman Clare White thought this "startling revelation" made the whole furore somewhat academic and merited withdrawal of the original non-confidence motion put by hospital chief of staff Dr. Elinor Powell and seconded by Oak Bay Ald. Peter Bunn.

But Dr. Powell said she couldn't without ignoring her mandate from the staff of the Jubilee.

The outcome was foretold Wednesday night at the hospital's annual general meeting, when hospital society members voted 22-15 in favor of a stronger non-confidence motion. Among the board members the vote was 5-4 against, with Prentice abstaining.

Thursday night when the end came, former Saanich alderman Joe Bourque was the only one to switch his vote — to the oust-Prentice camp. He said he admired the chairman as an individual but "I can't understand why you stuck it out."

He said afterwards he reversed his vote because of the overwhelming negative sentiment at the annual meeting the night before.

Bourque also criticized the medical staff of the Jubilee.

"This board has had a great deal of difficulty identifying with the medical staff. They've held themselves somewhat aloof and apart."

But communications and co-operation wouldn't improve if Prentice continued as chairman, he said.

Dr. Powell said the staff had full confidence in Prentice's leadership up to the time of the Moreton report earlier this year which pinpointed a number of defects in the administration of the Jubilee.

"It seems you have gone along with the nuts and bolts of the Moreton report but not the spirit," she said. Improved communications and co-operation between administration and staff were necessary, but the chairman had not gone along.

"I believe you have isolated yourself and the board from the members of the hospital staff. It was you, sir, who started the confrontation."

Prentice effectively resigned as chairman back in July when he said he wasn't a leader or advocate of sick people, said Dr. Powell, who added that the hospital employees as well as the 160 doctors who run the Jubilee feel Prentice must go.

White praised Prentice as a hard worker for the hospital who carried the greatest load of any member.

"I'm disappointed that certain members of the medical staff have really got their hooks into you. The patient is the person we're trying to protect, not the staff."

Fire chief Eric Simmons, who is vice-chairman of the board and the most likely successor to Prentice, also threw his support to the embattled chairman. Though some have accused him of failing to get the message across to the provincial government, Simmons said Prentice had clearly and forcefully enunciated the board's concerns about health care to Health Minister Bob McClelland.

Another supporter, John Winter, said that when McClelland announced stringent hospital spending guidelines earlier this year, they became the law of the land.

"You could say the hell with it and spend or you could make a determined effort to stay within the guidelines," he said.

Winter added that the Jubilee board could not just do as it liked. "There was that other master looking over our shoulder."

Bruce refuses to testify

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — A charge of aiding an escape laid against a penitentiary guard was dismissed Thursday after convicted killer Andy Bruce refused to testify.

Konstantine Pondelicik was charged with aiding a 1978 attempted escape from the B.C. Pen. Pondelicik was committed Thursday for trial on a charge of perjury.

Bruce, 30, was brought here from the Millhaven Penitentiary in Kingston, Ont. to testify at Pondelicik's preliminary hearing. He refused to rise when Judge J. K. Shaw entered court, refused to be sworn in and refused to give evidence.

"You had the opportunity to subpoena me months ago and this would have prevented my transfer to Millhaven," Bruce told Crown counsel Mac Norris during a recess. "But you chose not to do so."

"I don't like Pondelicik and I like you even less."

Brannen Lake patient punches MD

A patient who was expelled from the provincial government's Brannen Lake heroin treatment centre Wednesday after punching a doctor was treated no differently than other patients, the centre's director said Thursday.

John deRoos, 26, of Vancouver, a heroin addict for nine years, said he was driven to punching a doctor because "patients at Brannen Lake are treated like cattle" and because he was under severe emotional stress at the time.

DeRoos, a volunteer patient at the centre for a week, said he was taken off his methadone withdrawal program too soon. He said he was given a tranquillizer after a violent outburst and the drug put him in a comatose state for two days.

That, combined with the news that the woman he lived with was leaving him, led him to punch the doctor, he said.

Dr. John Higginbottam, centre director, said deRoos was treated the same as others and was put on a strict regimen of gradual withdrawal from methadone, a program which never varies.

"He was given chlorapromazine, which is a major tranquillizer, because he was being extremely aggressive. He had ripped a phone off a wall and kicked in a door and was a menace to the staff and other patients."

After punching the doctor, deRoos was given the choice of going to the security area or leaving the institution. He chose to leave.

"What must be realized is that patients being treated for heroin addiction are under enormous stress and become extremely manipulative," Higgenbottam said.

"We realize we are a high-profile public institution and so have to be ready to answer such claims as these. We are constantly being threatened by patients that if we don't behave they'll scream to the press."

The centre was opened last January following provincial government legislation compelling heroin addicts to take treatment for their illness.

Union says no to Endako bid

FRASER LAKE (CP) — A union on strike for nearly nine months at the Endako molybdenum mine has rejected a company proposal to end the strike.

Placer Development Ltd. suggested the 233-day-old strike could be ended if a number of disciplinary measures were taken against workers it believes were involved in acts of violence during the strike.

The company proposed the contentious issue be resolved by dismissing one employee, suspending six for six months and another six for three months. It recommended workers return to their jobs and that hearings into disciplinary action begin the following week.

The hearings would establish whether the workers charged by the company are guilty.

A spokesman for the Canadian Association of Industrial Mechanical and Allied Workers, which bargains for 485 workers at the mine, said the proposal was unacceptable and that none of the men should face charges.

Murder charged

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Richard John Brignall, 25, of Prince George, was charged Thursday with second-degree murder after the discovery of the body of a hunter who had been missing since Sept. 23.

Brignall was charged in the death of Anthony Felix Fillion, 58, of Prince George, after police, acting on an anonymous tip, found the body 20 kilometres northwest of here.

Answers demanded

VANCOUVER (CP) — Companies exploring for uranium in British Columbia will be asked to answer a detailed questionnaire, a royal commission inquiry into the subject decided Thursday.

Representatives of 26 companies involved in uranium exploration attended Thursday's hearings to answer questions about their projects asked by conservation groups, government departments and mining companies.

UFO identified

KAMLOOPS (CP) — Some people here thought they were seeing unidentified flying objects this morning — but they weren't.

What they saw flashing through the night was a piece of a Russian rocket as it re-entered the atmosphere.

Maj. Cliff Zacharias of the North American Air Defence Command said in a telephone interview from Colorado that the Russian rocket had pushed something else into orbit, then moved into orbit itself.

Shipyard orders

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada has agreed to loan $11-million to a Brazilian company so it can buy three Canadian-built steel-hulled supply vessels, the Export Development Corporation announced Thursday. Bel-Aire Shipyard Ltd. of Vancouver is to build two of the vessels and Vancouver Shipyards Co. Ltd. is to build the third. The sale is expected to generate 610 man years of work.

Four run

DUNCAN — Ald. Graham Bruce, who topped the polls in two previous municipal elections, will contest the mayoralty seat in the North Cowichan municipal elections.

Also in the race are Ald. Dennis Hogan, former mayor Gerry Smith, and incumbent Mayor George Whittaker.

One of Bruce's main planks calls for establishment of a committee-at-large made up of ratepayer groups to discuss problems with council.

Jobless move on, stats improve

By AL FORREST

Unemployment in Victoria's construction industry has fallen to 20 per cent after being in the range of 35 to 40 per cent for most of the past two years — but it's not all good news.

Many tradesmen have left town.

The unemployment figures were released today by local Canada Employment Centre manager Wally Pickering who said two factors were involved in the improved construction picture.

"There has been some increase in local construction in both commercial and residential work."

But there has also been a drain of manpower to out-of-town locations, especially to the Nanaimo area.

Contruction projects locally include a new shopping centre at McKenzie and Quadra, six apartment blocks on the old San Sebastian Motel site and a number of single family homes.

Meanwhile, the Victoria economy continues to be strong, compared with 1978.

Tourist revenues in September were up 15 to 20 per cent over last year.

September tourists tend to be older couples without children who have large amounts of money to spend.

A survey of major Victoria stores conducted by CEC information officer Dan Bowes showed retail sales up at least 10 per cent from the previous September. Tourist buying added signficantly to the revenues.

Department stores were keeping their souvenir sections open later than ever before.

After a good summer, merchants were optimistic about the fall and winter seasons.

Employment in Victoria stores is up about six per cent from last year.

The real estate market continued its surge through September. There were 357 housing units worth a total ot $24 million sold through the Multiple Listing Service during the month, up from 290 units worth $18.8 million last September.

There were 407 listings during September, down from 633 in September, 1978.

The CEC farm labor office in September found jobs for 195 people for harvesting potatoes, planting flower blubs, sorting vegetables, picking mushrooms, sorting apples and working in greenhouses.

Lumber markets continue to be strong in September and the outlook is good at least until spring. Plywood markets, however, have weakened.

FLYING MUD bespatters competitors and spectators alike as racing chariots round a curve at the Norfolk County Fair in Simcoe, Ont. The chariot races, one of numerous crowd pleasing events with a distant agricultual connection, are held every day during the fair, an annual event in this community north of Toronto.

Before the judge

A 22-year-old woman was charged in provincial court Thursday with causing bodily harm with intent to wound, maim or disfigure.

Lauren Robinson, 2819 Colquitz, was charged after an incident earlier Thursday in Saanich.

Judge William Ostler agreed with duty legal aid lawyer John Hills' suggestion to remand her in custody until today for election of trial method and possible bail hearing.

Defence lawyer Brian MacKenzie elected trial by judge and jury for 28-year-old Joseph Charles Edward Leblanc, no fixed address.

Leblanc is charged with attempted robbery with violence on Sept. 25 at the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, 1022 Government.

A preliminary hearing has been set for Oct. 25.

A $300 fine was levied against 17-year-old Stephen Arthur Levy of Port Renfrew who pleaded guilty to a July 28 break-in at a general store.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan said the manager of the Port Renfrew General Store interrupted a break-in shortly after 5 a.m.

Defence lawyer William McElmoyle said Levy had been at a party the night before and got drunk. As Levy was walking home, he decided to go in to find cigarettes.

Ostler placed the youth on six months probation.

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: Dennis Norman Beatty, 32, of 808 Mann, $450; Gordon Horst Waite, 56, of 4272 Dieppe, $400; Ralph Edward Johnson, 53, of Alta Loma, Calif., $350; Jose Teixeira, 22, of 3498 Lovat, $350; Albert Lunny, 75, of 1680 Poplar, $300; Cameron Hadfield, 27, of Malahat Drive, $250; and Cheryl Lynn Donaldson, 21, of 4117 Glanford, $50.

In addition, Lunny was ordered to perform 50 hours of community service work and Donaldson was ordered to do 60 hours and was also fined $100 for refusing a breath test demand.

Four drivers sent to jail

Two persons were jailed in provincial court Thursday for driving while suspended and two others for drinking and driving.

Judge William Ostler sentenced 21-year-old Guy Real St. Laurent, 2234 Shelbourne, to 30 days in jail, and 20-year-old James Bruce McNair of Powell River to 14 days after they pleaded guilty to driving while suspended.

St. Laurent hit a parked car in the 1200-block Old Esquimalt on Sept. 19 and caused $1,300 damage.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan said St. Laurent was suspended from driving May 4 and was not to drive again until Oct. 4. St. Laurent was convicted of the same offence Sept. 5, received a 10-day jail term and had only been out of prison for a few days when the incident occurred.

McNair had not been involved in an accident but was stopped by Victoria police Sept. 27 when he tried to convince officers he wasn't the driver. He was convicted of his second drinking-driving offence on April 9, 1979, when he received a 14-day sentence and was also fined $300 on that date for driving while suspended.

Ostler also handed 23-year-old Barry John Hermann, 625 Constance, a 14-day jail term for his second impaired driving conviction this year.

Hermann, who was celebrating his birthday Thursday, was fined $400 for impaired driving on Jan. 22 in Victoria.

"Well, it's a birthday you'll remember for a long time and I'm sorry about that," Ostler said.

Judge Fred Green handed out a 10-day, intermittent sentence to 42-year-old Burt Jasper Charles of East Sooke Road.

Charles was charged after he was found passed out behind the wheel of a vehicle Nov. 16 last year in Sooke and subsequent breath test readings obtained by Sooke RCMP were .25 and .24.

Charles was convicted of the same offence on March 29, 1975, Nov. 12, 1963, and Nov. 2, 1978, receiving a $100 fine and 100 hours of community service work on the last occasion.

Refuse burning curbs urged

City council's fire prevention committee voted Thursday to cut back on what Ald. Larry Ryan called the "disgusting" practice of backyard refuse burning.

If its recommendation is accepted by the full council, Victorians will be able to fire up their burner barrels and incinerators only on Fridays and Saturdays between Sept. 1 and May 31. Now burning is also allowed on Mondays.

Several aldermen said they had numerous complaints about smoke, particularly about Monday burning.

"I think a case could be made for eliminating this disgusting practice," Ryan said.

Ald. Robin Blencoe suggested that composting garden refuse was a better use than burning it.

Ryan said some apartment owners use the burning bylaw to get rid of garbage, and deputy city engineer William Jorgensen agreed there was misuse.

Mayor Mike Young said composting isn't feasible because of the volume of materials generated in this city of gardens.

The committee finally agreed on a compromise to reduce burning time by one third. Other conditions remain unchanged: burning may be done only in daylight, more than 15 feet from the property line or other buildings, with a water hose readily available and a responsible adult constantly supervising the blaze.

Burning is still banned from June 1 to Aug. 31, still relatively unregulated compared to Vancouver which bans rubbish incineration entirely and allows garden burning only two weekends a year in spring and fall.

Saudis to reduce oil flow Jan. 1

NEW YORK (AP) — Saudi Arabia's foreign minister says the world's largest oil exporter plans to reduce its production Jan. 1. The move could put further upward pressure on world oil prices.

Prince Saud said the Saudis' previously announced decision to continue producing 9.5 million barrels a day through the end of the year was only temporary.

"Beyond Jan. 1, there is no plan to do that," he said in an interview with the Wall Street Journal, published today. He said the Saudis plan to reduce production to 8.5 million barrels a day.

Saudi Arabia boosted production by one million barrels a day earlier this year as gasoline lines plagued parts of the United States. The move was seen as an effort to stabilize oil prices and supplies.

The Saudis extended that temporary increase to the end of 1979, but had not said what they would do beyond that.

"We hoped this expansion period would serve as a transition period for the consuming countries to act," he said.

Banks' BCRIC sales policies criticized

The Pacific district council of the Investment Dealers Association of Canada has submitted a report to the inspector general of banks about a range of practices employed by some B.C. chartered banks in the distribution of B.C. Resources Investment Corp. shares.

The report was written in co-operation with the Vancouver Stock Exchange.

Spokesmen for the IDA and the stock exchange refused to comment on the contents of the report until officials in charge of the Bank Act have had an opportunity to review the report.

At the height of the share distribution scheme, investment dealers said some banks had over-aggressive lending policies and loans managers with little knowledge of the stock market were giving clients advice on securities investment.

Some banks were also criticized for abandoning their usual rule of not lending at a margin level higher than the securities industry and, at times, lending as much as 100 per cent of the purchase price of the BCRIC shares.

Banks, trust companies, securities dealers and other financial institutions received 25 cents a share for the distribution of the five free BCRIC shares and sale of additional shares.

Pope attacks liberal trends

tion in the United States, and lumped euthanasia, or mercy killing, in the same category:

"Just as you defended the unborn in the truth of their being, so also you clearly spoke up for the aged, asserting 'euthanasia or mercy killing is a grave moral evil. Such evil is incompatible with respect for human dignity and reverence for life.' "

U.S. priests travelling with the pope said his speech before the bishops conference was one of the most comprehensive explanations of traditional church attitudes on sexuality they had ever heard. They said it left little room for manoeuvre to church liberals who had been seeking more flexible guidelines, especially concerning birth control.

He told his audience of about 300 bishops — the top level of the U.S. Catholic hierarchy — they must be "absolutely faithful" to all traditional church teachings. But he also realized his orthodoxy would be unpopular among some of America's 50 million Catholics, adding: "It is not possible for us to avoid all criticism; nor is it possible to please everyone." But, he explained, church traditions represent "the word of God in its purity and integrity."

John Paul's long-awaited speech to the American bishops — the ecclesiastical equivalent of his human-rights address to the United Nations on Tuesday — was direct and firm.

It followed a joyful mass he celebrated today with Chicago's Polish community — second in numbers in the world only to Warsaw — at Five Holy Martyrs Church, named for the first five Catholic saints from Poland.

Meanwhile, many priests, nuns and lay people have reacted swiftly — and strongly — to Thursday's firm stand by the Pope against the ordination of women as Roman Catholic priests.

"Needless to say, I disagree with him," said Maureen Reiff, a board member of Chicago Catholic Women, a feminist group. "We are all called by our baptism to the priesthood — men and women alike."

TOWN TALK

That fat harvest moon rising in the east these days is not really that big. It's common knowledge that it's an optical illusion, but someone's finally come up with a way to prove it.

Vancouver planetarium director Dave Rodger says the moon appears bigger close to the horizon because the human eye sees it among houses and trees — not because of any supposed magnifying effect of the atmosphere.

You can demonstrate the theory by looking at the moon upside down through your legs. It sounds ridiculous but it works. Your eyes have no familiar reference points to gauge its size and the moon actually "shrinks."

So take a moon at the moon tonight.

People with power saws are cutting up logs on Shoal Bay to lay in a winter fuel supply and in the process driving some residents mad with the noise and smell.

"We've had these awful power saws going hours and hours," moans Mrs. Andrew McGregor of 456 Beach.

"I don't care a blow about how much wood they take, it's the noise factor we have to put up with. One man was down there at 9 o'clock on a Sunday morning."

One recent afternoon an amateur woodcutter was at it for 3½ hours straight, she said.

She said she's complained to Oak Bay Mayor Brian Smith but nothing's been done and police will only act to stop such disturbances on a Sunday or a holiday.

"There should be cutting at certain hours on certain days. Damn it all, there is a limit to noise pollution," she says.

There are only 81 drinking days until Christmas.

And for perhaps five of those days, CounterAttack will blitz the Greater Victoria area, going so far as to bring in a second BATmobile.

The blitz warning was delivered Thursday at a CounterAttack luncheon at the Red Lion Inn.

Why take a chance? Take a cab. If you drink, think — as CounterAttack keeps telling us.

Town Talk's feet feat of the year award goes to officer cadet Paul Leroux of Victoria.

Why? For running a total of 1,200 miles in two years.

He recently was awarded the Canadian Forces Physical Fitness Award for aerobic excellence.

Leroux is in his final year of the oceanography degree program at Royal Roads college.

A friend of the retired Rev. Melvin Dobson who was a resident of the Beaconville Apartments for some 14 years until he moved out this year, says ill health was not the reason, as stated in a Times story on Wednesday about the old building.

He's hard of hearing but still fit. Dobson was told that the building at Blanshard and Douglas was to be renovated, she said.

A man known as Uncle Ed on CKDA when the station first went on the air died Wednesday in Vancouver after a heart attack.

Ed Farey, who was 61, was an original member of the staff at CKDA and developed a wide audience on his Spinner Sanctum record show.

He left to work at Vancouver stations CKNW and CFUN, returned to CKDA for a time as program director, did freelance television commercials and latterly had been employed by Manpower.

Capital Region District representative Al Beasley regaled the View Royal Ratepayers Association this week with the latest hot news about sewers.

At one point, he said he had invited Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier out to see View Royal's problem areas.

"But he never showed," Beasley said.

He then pointed out that there was a pocket of Saanich residents just off the Trans-Canada Highway near Helmcken Road that Saanich was going to have difficulty servicing.

"So we're going to run them through our own sewers," Beasley said. "We're going to be good neighbors whether they like it or not."

Evicted . . . and no appeal

By PAUL MINVIELLE

The whole procedure has been very proper, very legal, very civilized.

The result for 22 mobile home and trailer owners at Centennial Trailer Park at 1455 Craigflower has been very, very traumatic.

All were told to get out. And even though they heard the same thing almost three years ago, nobody believed it would happen. But it is happening, and the residents are apparently helpless.

The tenants of the park, which is on the Songhees Indian Reserve, were issued eviction notices (called "termination notices to tenants") June 28, giving them until Oct. 31 to clear out.

The notices were sent by Litwin Construction Ltd., 204-151 Cedar Hill Crossroad, whose president, Mike Litwin Sr., lives at 4700 Deerwood Terrace in Broadmead. Litwin wants to build townhouses on the land, which is leased from band chief John Albany.

A subsequent appeal to the Rentalsman was based on the charge that the notices were improperly delivered, a feeble legal shot at a loophole that wasn't there.

And now Sheila Wood, on Lot 8 in the park, doesn't know what to do.

Until April, she lived in a small travel trailer, which she sold. Then she got into her present mobile home.

The trailer is spotless, and Wood proudly shows the new carpet, the recently refinished kitchen cupboards, the freshly painted bedroom.

At first she leased with an option to buy. In April, when the owner pressured her, she decided to take the plunge and buy. Two months later, she got the eviction notice.

The problem for her and 20 others in the park, is that there is nowhere to go. One tenant had his unit hauled to a Malahat trailer court, but hauling costs $700 or $800. In many cases, Centennial residents can't afford it. In some cases, the mobile homes are too old to make the trip.

"Where can we go?" asked Wood. "We tried several things, but nothing works."

Wood and several other tenants confirmed that "vultures" had made an appearance — would-be buyers who know the owners' plight and hope to snap up $15,000 mobiles for as little as $2,000.

Bev and Ted Sanderson bought their unit two years ago from Friendly Mobile Homes.

"They pooh-poohed the idea that anyone would want to build here. It didn't make sense to put permanent structures on leased land, they told us," said Mrs. Sanderson.

"Frank Mitchell (Esquimalt-Port Renfrew NDP MLA) has been really helpful. But the time factor is really working against us now. And we're not getting any help from the government."

Provincial Secretary Hugh Curtis was apprised of the situation by Al Hunt, president of the Mobile Home Owners Association. Curtis wrote back to say the matter had been turned over to Housing Minister Jim Chabot.

The matter seems to have died there.

Wilfred Hobday is 76. He and his wife came from Tofino three years ago, looking forward to a quiet time, but Mrs. Hobday died soon after they moved in.

Hobday hoped somebody would resolve the situation, but that hope is fading.

"I have a buyer providing she or I can find somewhere to put the thing," Hobday said.

"I don't know who's at fault," he said, "or whether it's through a lack of our own endeavors."

"I don't know what to do. I guess I'll have to go and live with my daughter in Sooke. I don't see any way out of it."

Hobday had thought the co-op suggested by Mitchell would provide the answer, but the idea bogged down.

Mitchell said he had organized the residents into a co-op, but he couldn't explain why it had foundered.

The idea was for the 22 owners to band together and lease two acres nearby, still on reserve land.

At first, it was thought the new park would cost about $2,900 a pad, meaning a $100 a month rental.

But in giving his approval to the project, the Indian agent said the new park must meet regional district standards.

This boosted the cost of each pad to $4,500, which translated into a $135 a month rental.

For many residents, particularly the pensioners, it was just too much.

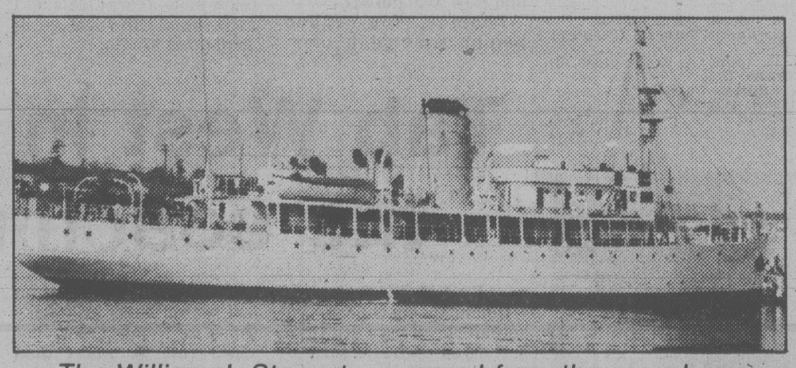
Said Mitchell: "This was going to be their last home. Some are still making payments on their trailers. The pad rental where they are is only $63 a month."

A Litwin Construction spokesman would say only that each resident would be paid $300 towards the cost of removing his or her unit.

Calls to government ministries this morning indicated that while there is vague awareness of the problem, nothing can be done.

Operators of new trailer and/or mobile home parks are often sales organizations which sell the homes that go into the park. They're not anxious to accommodate an influx of older units.

For Centennial Trailer Park, the end is Oct. 31. What happens to the tenants?



The William J. Stewart . . . saved from the scrapheap

Survey ship bought by Oak Bay Marina

Oak Bay Marina has rescued the mothballed survey steamship William J. Stewart from the shipbreakers.

General manager Wayne Wagner confirmed today the 47-year-old ship will be brought to the Inner Harbor within a month for restoration and adaptation of the former hydrographic vessel into a tourist-oriented role.

He said it had not been determined whether the Stewart will be fully restored to operate under her own power, or whether it will be moored, possibly as a museum or floating restaurant.

Wagner said Marina owner Bob Wright, travelling in Europe, had not been made aware of the marina's successful bid to Crown Assets Disposal Corp., and that more specific plans will be made for the ship on his return.

He would not disclose the price, but Crown Assets said it was between $100,000 and $150,000.

"We're very pleased we've got it because several of the bidders were scrap dealers. We're rather proud we've rescued it," Wagner said.

He promised the ship will be ready for the next tourist season.

Stewart will be towed from her berth at the Institute of Ocean Sciences at Patricia Bay where she has been for nearly three seasons, and docked at Capital Iron on Store Street where marine engineering consultant Case Laboratories will help develop her future role.

Wagner said the marina's bid was accompanied by a letter outlining the historic value of the ship and the proposed tourism role, which he thought influenced the federal decision to accept the bid.

Probe asked on Prospect Lake access cutoff

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Prospect Lake residents want a formal inquiry into Saanich's failure to protect public access to most of the east side of Prospect Lake.

Spokesman Ena Lang said Thursday Mayor Mel Couvelier will receive a letter today asking that land be expropriated for public access.

They say there is no public route down to the beach because Saanich planners didn't ask for it when four lakefront properties were subdivided, one of them this summer.

The properties seal off 4,500 feet of waterfront between the Prospect Lake golf course and Echo Drive.

When a waterfront property is subdivided Saanich is legally entitled to lake access every 660 feet.

The property owners avoided providing it by sucessfully appealing to the highways ministry.

Lang, a 14-year resident of 291 Stevens, said people are upset because they have been denied a public path to the lake from Stevens.

The spot is a favorite swimming area for youngsters, she said.

"There has been a great wrong done. It's very, very serious," she said.

"Future generations will never be able to see that side of Prospect Lake."

It has been learned that municipal surveyor Gordon Alston-Stewart in an inter-office letter dated April 19 questioned the planning policy.

"The east side of Prospect Lake is steep, but certainly in 4,500 feet of shoreline we could get some access or possibly a dedication for a public strip with water access," he said.

A popular route to the water is on land owned by Victoria lawyer Ronald Cook, who appealed the access provision and then subdivided a 33-acre parcel this summer into three lots.

Cook said Thursday he was surprised the residents are demanding access.

He said two of the lots have been sold and he plans to build a home on the third.

Planner Gil Laurenson told council a footpath wasn't required because of "steep topography and the rocky nature of the area."

But Mrs. Lang said she can't believe the explanation.

She said she and another woman over 60 walked down the property line and into the water without difficulty.

The Land Registry Act states where subdivided land borders a body of water access must be provided by public road.

In the past eight years four subdivision applicants appealed the access provision with no opposition from Saanich, Don South, highways ministry senior approving officer, told the Times.

But assistant Saanich planner Alan Hopper said Saanich did oppose at least one of the appeals.

Laurenson informed South last May that Saanich wouldn't oppose the access appeal by Cook's firm of Cook, Roberts and Whittaker.

South, who said he is too busy to investigate every case, said he he didn't realize the east side of Prospect Lake is now closed to the public.

And Laurenson recently informed council it is too late to provide the footpath now because the subdivision has been registered.

Lot size in that area is a minimum 10 acres. Nothing can be done to get public access until the minimum is lowered to five acres.

Mrs. Lang doesn't believe that will happen in the near future and in the meantime the public's enjoyment of the lake is limited.

She said she is upset a municipal planner would take action on such an important issue without consulting council first.

Ald. Mary Casilio, Saanich ombudsman, said she first heard of the situation in June through Mrs. Lang.

She said she was told by Laurenson municipal surveyors said the land was too steep for a footpath.

But Casilio said she walked the route and the bluff presented little trouble.

"It's just a dip that could be filled in," she said.

She said access should have been reserved by the municipality, regardless of the roughness of the terrain.

Baseball in China is where:

- A pitcher sips tea between innings
- "Sha" means "KILL"
- The shortstop is called guerrilla
- The female first baseman is a pro
- Every pitch is presumed a strike
- Earl Weaver would go bonkers

By FOX BUTTERFIELD
c. 1979 N.Y. Times News Service

PEKING — When the pitcher for the Tianjin City team sat down to rest between innings in the concrete dugout, a pigtailed young woman in a baggy Mao jacket poured him a cup of steaming tea.

But that was one of the few concessions to local custom in a game between Tianjin, a major industrial port, and Gansu, an arid province in China's remote Northwest. The game was part of a round-robin baseball playoff being staged here recently as one of 34 sports in China's Fourth National Games.

Baseball is far from being as popular as table tennis in China, and it was snuffed out completely by the Cultural Revolution, condemned as a bourgeois pursuit. So most of the players in this year's championships had only been practicing since the game was officially "rehabilitated" in 1975.

But what they lack in experience, they make up for in effort and exuberance.

In the bottom of the fifth inning of a scoreless pitching duel, the leadoff batter for Gansu smacked a solid single up the middle. He was sacrificed to second base on a well-placed bunt, then took third on a fly ball to right field.

The next hitter drove a hard grounder into the hole between first and second. But Tianjin's second baseman dived to his left, came up with the ball in a cloud of dust from the dirt infield and tossed underhand to first for the out.

Tianjin's pitcher, a deeply-tanned 23-year-old factory worker, tossed his cap in the air and shouted, "sha" (kill.). Then he raced over and put his arm around the second baseman, escorting him off the field.

Tianjin eventually won the game, 3-0.

The vocabulary of the game, so cherished a part of baseball in the United States, is almost an exact translation into Chinese except for the shortstop. He is called the "guerrilla."

Asked when the Chinese had begun to play baseball, Xieh Chaoquan, the Deputy Secretary General of the Chinese Baseball and Softball Federation, displayed the usual Chinese sense of antiquity. "According to unconfirmed reports, it began in the Quing Dynasty," he said, sitting at an official's table in the stands behind home plate.

In the late 19th century, he explained, some of the first Chinese students to venture abroad brought baseball back to China. Later some of Mao's Red Army guerrillas played it, Xieh insisted.

That gives it a different origin from baseball in Taiwan, the island off China's coast occupied by the Chinese Nationalists, which has dominated the Little League World Series for much of the last decade. The game was introduced there by the Japanese.

Xieh, a gray-haired man whose son is on China's national tennis team, denied that Peking's purpose in trying to develop baseball now was to compete with Taiwan. But it is clear that efforts are being made to transplant the sport.

The Tianjin team was outfitted in replicas of the American uniform, white with orange and black letters, Chinese characters on the front and English on the back. The metal bats and the gloves are made in Shanghai. Great lengths were made to build the stadium, a large concrete enclosure set in farm fields 10 miles west of Peking. Land in China is in desperately short supply.

Baseball games turn up in unexpected corners of China. Not long ago at a temple in Sichuan Province dedicated to a famous second-century scholar and general, two teams were playing softball on a grassy field next to the red-walled temple.

The first baseman of one team, all female, was a tall, graceful 17-year-old named Li Bahua, who said she had only played the game for a year. But now, she said, having finished high school, she practiced every day and was paid for doing so.

Xieh, China's equivalent to Commisioner Bowie Kuhn of the major leagues, denied that baseball players in China were actually paid for playing. According to him, they draw their regular salaries from the factories where they work, or the schools they attend.

But they do receive a special subsidy of about $1 a day for food, a not-inconsiderable amount in China. They also attend training camps for several weeks before major contests like the National Games.

When asked if the factories ever had objected to giving their athlete-workers paid leave for so long to play sports, Xieh said, "It's an honor to have an athlete represent your province."

The baseball stadium outside Peking has no ads, unlike parks in America. But it does have a large red sign in left field proclaiming, "Friendship first, competition second," China's official sports policy. To familiarize the 500 spectators with the intricacies of the game, the public-address announcer described each play, quoting baseball's rule book.

The Gansu-Tianjin game, though it went a full nine innings, was over in a surprisingly quick one-and-a-half hours. The blue-uniformed umpires seemed to presume that almost every pitch was a strike — there was only one walk in the game — and every baserunner, unless there was no play on him, was called out.

Some of their calls would have drawn endless protests from a manager like the Baltimore Orioles' Earl Weaver. But the Chinese teams seemed accustomed to the practice.

No song in Gene's heart now

BALTIMORE (AP) — The Singing Cowboy headed back to California today without a banjo on his knee or a song in his heart, but stoutly urging everybody not to send the orchestra home yet.

"We've come a long way, and there's no reason to believe we can't keep coming," said Gene Autry, president and chairman of the board of the California Angels, who trail Baltimore two games to none in the American League's best-of-five baseball championship series.

"I want a champion," said Autry. "I think we'll get one."

However, Autry may find himself singing in the dark.

The Orioles hold that commanding lead while the Angels face having to make an unheard-of comeback with a pitching staff that is being rapidly depleted.

The Orioles struck for nine runs in the first three innings Thursday, then survived a nerve-rattling California rally to edge the Angels, 9-8.

Don Stanhouse, the relief ace whose hair resembles that of Harpo Marx and whose style on and off the mound has earned him the nickname, Stan The Man Unusual, pitched into and out of a bases-loaded jam in the ninth jnning to move the Orioles to the brink of qualifying for their fifth World Series in 14 years.

"Never a doubt in my kind," quipped Stanhouse, whose late-inning habits of putting runners on base before preserving a Baltimore victory usually drive manager Earl Weaver into the dugout tunnel for a smoke.

Weaver stayed around this time, though, as the Angels scored twice in the ninth. With the bases loaded following an intentional walk to Don Baylor, Stanhouse got Brian Downing, the league's third-leading hitter, to ground to third baseman Doug DeCinces, who tagged Dan Ford coming down the line from second for the final out.

"Earl was rooting for me today . . . he usually doesn't see me pitch," Stanhouse said.

The loss means that, to win the series in their first post-season appearance, the Angels will have to sweep the final three games of the series, which resumes tonight in Anaheim with California's Frank Tanana pitching against Baltimore's Dennis Martinez.

No American League team has ever accomplished that feat, and California's uphill pennant quest appeared to be further hampered by attrition on the pitching staff.

Manager Jim Fregosi said that reliever Mark Clear, who pitched 5 2-3 innings Thursday, "has had some arm problems and I doubt we'll be able to use him the rest of the series."

In Wednesday night's series opener, Angels starter Nolan Ryan had to leave after seven innings because of calf muscle cramps, and his availability for a possible fifth game is uncertain.

As they had in the first game, the Angels took a first-inning lead on Ford's two-out home run off 23-game winner Mike Flanagan. Ford is the first player in the 11-year history of the league championships to homer in the first inning of two consecutive games and only the fifth to hit home runs in back-to-back contests.

The Orioles moved ahead to stay in the bottom of the inning and were on top 9-1 after three innings.

But the Angels scored once in the sixth on Rod Carew's double and Carney Lansford's single and added another in the seventh on singles by Don Baylor and Downing and a sacrifice fly by Bobby Grich.

Then in the eighth, California reached Flanagan for three runs. Pinch-hitter Merv Rettenmund walked, first baseman Eddie Murray committed an error on Carew's grounder and Lansford singled, scoring Dickie Thon.

Enter Stanhouse, who gave up a run-scoring single to Baylor and a sacrifice fly to carve Baltimore's lead to three runs. In the ninth, pinch-hitter Larry Harlow walked, was forced at second by Rick Miller, who moved to third on Willie Davis' double and scored on Carew's ground-out. When Lansford followed with a run-scoring single, Weaver visited Stanhouse. He left him in and was glad he did.

Cincinnati Reds were playing Pittsburgh Pirates in Pittsburgh today in the third game of the National League playoff. If a fourth game is necessary it will be played at Pittsburgh Saturday at 5:30 p.m. PDT.

If a fourth game is necessary in the American League it will be played Saturday at 12:15 p.m. Both games will be televised on channel 5.

Cougars make it three

SEATTLE — Victoria Cougars came from behind to defeat Seattle Breakers 6-4 before a sparse crowd here Thursday and pushed their record to 3-0 for the first week of play in the Western Hockey League.

Cougars get a chance to make it 4-0 while facing Breakers in a return bout at 8:30 p.m. Saturday in Victoria's Memorial Arena.

Torrie Robertson and Greg Adams scored two goals each to lead Cougars.

Breakers took a 2-0 lead in the first period as Brian Graves scored twice but the Cougars came back with goals by Robertson and Adams in the second period.

Robertson's second goal put the Cougars ahead early in the third period.

John Straith tied the game again two minutes later but Bob Smith scored for Victoria at 6:30 and Grant Rezansoff counted the winner at 7:42.

Adams scored an insurance tally and Allan Graves scored in the third period for Seattle.

Kevin Eastman kicked out 29 shots for Victoria.

Thomas helps U.S. keep lead

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Kurt Thomas and Rhonda Schwandt won all-around honors Thursday night during the second of five performances in the Pacific gymnastics championships and helped the United States keep its lead.

The two competitions, including the first at Honolulu on Monday, left the U.S. with 383.30 points followed by China with 373.85, Japan 368.55, Canada 365.80, Australia 352.85, Mexico 342.85 and New Zealand 342.25.

Thomas, top-ranked among American men, scored 57.65 Thursday. He also was all-around winner in the first competition.

Warren Long of Montreal and Shunichi Matsuoto of Japan tied for second in men's all-around competition at 56.25. Canadian champion Philip Delesalle of Port Alberni did no compete in the first competitions.

Schwandt, the other all-around winner at Honolulu, won Thursday with a score of 38.85 followed by U.S. team-mate Tracey Talavera at 37.90 and Elfie Schlegel of Toronto at 37.675.

Tab West in hoop stakes - the coaching is red hot

By JIM CRERAR

Handicapping college basketball players is a little like betting on a giraffe race — you're never quite sure who will win by a neck.

But it might be worth a small wager that next spring's Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Association champion will come out of the Canada West men's conference.

The CWUAA this year boasts three of the hottest coaches currently guiding collegiate clubs — UVic Vikings' Ken Shields, Calgary Dinosaurs' Gary Howard and newcomer Brian Heaney of Alberta Golden Bears.

They're the early-line favorites but a word of caution — don't take Peter Mullins' UBC Thunderbirds lightly.

Here's how they shape up, listed in last season's order of finish:

Vikings: Shields goes after a third straight conference crown without all-star guard Robbie Parris, who graduated, but has scoring champion Billy Loos back after a one-year leave of absence and guard Ilario Pasquale, one of the country's top-rated high schoolers last year at Sudbury Lockerby. Shields also has a crackerjack assistant in Norm Vickery, here this year on a Coaching Association of Canada grant after guiding Laurentian Vees to five national women's college crowns. Improving on last season's 17-3 first-place finish is a tall order, but Vikes rate no worse than even money to repeat.

Calgary: Second to UVic last year with a 13-7 mark, Dinos lost the playoff in two straight to the Vikings but made the nationals anyway as the host team. Coach Howard has turned into something of a maverick, thumbing his nose at CWUAA recruiting restrictions that prohibit soliciting talent beyond provincial boundaries. Could have the best chance of unseating the Vikes.

Alberta: Heaney takes over a squad that finished third (12-8), a game behind Calgary. The Brooklyn, N.Y., native brings a reputation as a relentless self-driver acquired when he guided St. Mary's Huskies of Halifax to three national titles in his eight-year stint there. Included were championships the last two seasons and a 90-83 win over the Vikings in last spring's finale at Calgary. No worse than third again, maybe higher.

UBC: The bottom fell out on Mullins last season when a couple of his regulars were no-shows. But the T-Birds closed fast and finished with a 10-10 mark. Mullins, a veteran with Olympic coaching experience, has the sleeper this season. The prognosis: Watch out.

Lethbridge Pronghorns: Smallest of the six conference schools, the team finished with a 7-13 record and could have trouble improving.

Saskatchewan Huskies: After a 1-19 disaster, nowhere to go but up.

Perhaps not surprisingly, the CWUAA women's conference could be a carbon copy of the men's division, at least in the top three where defending champion Calgary Dinnies face pressure from the Vikettes and Alberta Pandas.

Calgary: Donna Roman moves up from Lethbridge as the new coach and brings with her Donna Hanna, a unanimous CWUAA choice as all-star guard with the Pronghorns last year. Also new is national all-star Dori McPhail, another guard from Winnipeg Wesettes.

Vikettes: Kathy Shields has Carol Turney-Loos, a senior national player, back at guard after a one-year absence to augment returnees Traci McAra, Jane Boa, Susan Shaw, Luanne Hebb and Cindy Smith. Top newcomers include Sandy Lewis from Home Lumber, Donna Digby from New Westminster high and Jamie Mackie, a transfer from Laurentian. Outlook: An excellent chance to take it all after forcing Calgary to the limit in last spring's playoff.

Alberta: Debbie Shogan's girls are always tough to beat, especially for the Vikettes who lost three out of four to the Pandas last year. Most of the team is back, including forward Trixie Kannekins, a former national junior.

Saskatchewan Huskiettes: Coach Pat Jackson's teams are always well-disciplined and usually unbeatable at home. Vikettes were the only team to win a game in Saskatoon last season. Guards Sheila Brennan and Nancy Brentnell, both Canada West all-stars, are back.

Lethbridge Pronghorns: Little is known other than that the team has a new coach, ex-UBC Thunderette Louisa Zerbe.

UBC Thunderettes: Veteran swimming and basketball coach Jack Pomfret takes the reigns in a bid to move the team out of last place. Pomfret coached the UBC men before Mullins moved in. Forward Agnes Baker, a transfer from Laurentian, should help.

Caribou population going up in Spatsizi

Leaving the argument about whether or not there should be hunting in large, isolated wilderness parks aside for now, the current Greenpeace cause makes little sense from a biological point of view.

Greenpeace, with it's usual dramatic confrontation tactics, is attempting to focus attention on trophy hunting of caribou in Spatsizi provicial park, located about 320 kilometres north of Smithers.

Hunting is legal in the 1.6-million-acre park but Greenpeace and other environmental groups want to get it stopped. They believe that the caribou herd in the park is too small to sustain a hunt.

During the past two years, however, studies have revealed that the calf-to-adult ratio has actually increased rather than declined or remained stable.

A cursory count, because of limited funds and a lack of time, has produced a figure of 526 caribou in the total area of Spatsizi, of which 13.3 per cent or 70 animals were calves.

That total figure, because it was really only a spot check, would only err in being too low.

Studies of caribou throughout North America have shown that a 10 per cent calf-to-adult figure is the break-even point. Below 10 per cent, the over-all population declines. Above that figure, it increases.

The bottom line is simple. Despite hunting, the population is increasing.

Another point made by Greenpeace concerns leaving the meat behind after just taking the heads of trophy animals.

It may be repugnant to some, but the protein still stays within the ecosystem. Predators and scavengers utilize that meat rather than taking some other animal. It isn't wasted.

In any case, some of the meat is flown out to the villages of the local Indian guides and some used in the hunting camps.

Trophy hunting provides work and generates capital in the area for people who would otherwise be supported on the public dole.

Even the taking of the older mature bulls in a herd can sometimes perform a useful function. If there is an abundance of mature bulls, as some recent studies have shown in parts of Spatsizi, they spent more time fighting with each other than doing what comes naturally during the rutting season. Then the calf count drops.

Culling some of the mature bulls by hunting in some instances stimulates population growth.

Contrary to Greenpeace media proclamations, there is no real black and white sides to the question.

NIBBLES: Federal fisheries only rates salmon-fishing success in the Greater Victoria area as "fair".

Strip, flashtails, anchovies and hootchies are working well in the Saanich Inlet and Sidney areas while fishermen casting with drift-fishing lures are picking up most of the fish from Victoria to Sooke.

Two changes have been made in the 1979-80 hunting regulations. Effective immediately, there will be no hunting for mountain goats within management unit 1-15 (Knight Inlet). Recent aerial surveys have indicated a drastic decline in population, apparently due to unusual snow accumulations during the 1978-79 winter. The other change is also effective immediately. It provides an additional open season extending to Nov. 20 on bull elk having at least one branched antler in management unit 4-12.

Orr to fill fact-finding role

Times News Services

Hall of Fame defenceman Bobby Orr has been named special assistant to John Ziegler president of the National Hockey League.

Orr, 31, who played 10 seasons with Boston Bruins and portions of two others with Chicago Black Hawks before retiring on Nov. 8, 1978, is acknowledged as one of the greatest players in hockey history. His duties as Ziegler's assistant will be varied.

"We want him to look at youth hockey in North America," said Ziegler, pointing out that operating costs have forced many skating rinks out of business — thus depriving thousands of youngsters of a place to play.

"Bobby will head a task force which will meet with the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association and the Amateur Hockey Association of the United States to answer the following questions:

"How can we get more young men playing hockey? And how can we assist these amateur associations in coming up with solutions to their problems?"

Ziegler added that Orr also will perform color commentary on a number of NHL telecasts and will provide input on the NHL's involvement in international competitions.

"Hopefully, I can contribute something," said Orr. "Hockey is a tough, physical contact game, but we've got to get it across to the parents that hockey is not as violent a game as everyone seems to think."

Elsewhere, Vancouver Canucks announced Thursday that veteran goaltender Gary Bromley has been assigned to the team's Central Hockey League farm club in Dallas.

Bromley, 29, who averaged 3.81 goals against with two shutouts in the 38 Canucks games he played last season, joins the Dallas Black Hawks which start their schedule Oct. 10.

A Canucks spokesman said Bromley lost out to Curt Ridley for the back-up goalie spot behind Glen Hanlon.

In pre-season exhibition action Thursday, Philadelphia Flyers ended their schedule on a winning note.

Flyers nipped New York Rangers 5-4 in one of two pre-season games. Minnesota North Stars blanked Winnipeg Jets 6-0 in the other game.

Bobby Clarke scored with 2:39 remaining in the game to give the Flyers their fourth victory against two losses and five ties. The Rangers dropped to 1-3-3.

Paul Holmgred scored two goals to lead the Flyer attack and other single tallies were added by Tom Gorence and Rick MacLeish.

Claude Larose fired two goals to lead the Rangers.

Aussies take prize wickets

KANPUR, India (Reuter) — Australia snatched the initiative on a day of changing fortunes in the third cricket test against India on Thursday.

The tourists took a 33-run first innings lead, then captured the prize wickets of India's Sunil Gavaskar and Dilip Vengsarkar.

Idia, struggling for runs, was 67 for two, just 34 ahead at the close on the third day and the prospects of the match ending in a decision looked bright. The first two rain-ruined tests were drawn.

Australia resumed at 175 for four and lost its fifth wicket to the first ball of the day when medium pacer Kapil Dev trapped Kevin Wright leg before. The next wicket fell 18 runs later when Dave Whatmore was caught at extra cover off left arm spinner Dilip Doshi.

India then appeared to have the advantage, but left-handed Graham Yallop, who made 89, and Rick Darling stayed together in a determined stand of 53 runs. Yallop finally hit his own wicket while attempting a forcing shot off Dev. He batted for 198 minutes and hit 13 fours.

Darling made 59 despite a painful shoulder injury suffered on the first day when Australia totalled 304 in reply to India's first innings 271.

Shirley Riches and Carmel Marshall of Gorge Vale were scheduled to meet Kay Tribe and Phyllis Coxworth of Uplands today in the final of the Victoria City and District women's two-ball golf championship at Victoria Golf Club.

Riches and Marshall advanced by defeating Trudy Young and Irene Nyberg of Sooke's Broome Hill 4 and 3 while Tribe and Coxworth won 2 and 1 over Irene MacFarlane and Moray Paul of Glen Meadows.

In the consolation final, Evelyn Currie and Ann Belither of Royal Colwood were slated to tackle Lorna Rooper and Diane Phillips of Uplands. Currie and Belither defeated Joyce Woodruff and Lorraine Jacklin of Glen Meadows on the 19th while Rooper and Phillips topped Ruth McKay and Mildred Bond of Cedar Hill, 2 and 1.

Trios thump Legion

Oak Bay Trios bounced Esquimalt Legion 10-1 Thursday to record their second win in as many nights during a South Vancouver Island Junior "B" Hockey League game at Oak Bay Recreation Centre.

Rob Gallamore pounded in three goals to lead the Trio offence, double tallies were added by John Brown, Ken Buna and Gord Young and Geoff Courtnall supplied a single.

Bill Johnson averted a shutout for Esquimalt, now 0-2.

Doug Thornton blocked 51 shots on the Esquimalt goal while Jay Longpre only had to make 21 saves in the Oak Bay net.

Trios, who are 2-0, held period leads of 2-0 and 8-1 en route to the victory.

Coward a la Canadian flavor-flawed

By AUDREY JOHNSON

To complain that the Private Lives which opened The Belfry season Thursday was quite far from being definitive Noel Coward seems a bit churlish — particularly after sharing a fun evening with a thoroughly entertained audience.

But even while relishing some excellent things about the production, the truth must be told: This was Coward a la Canadian. Like cucumber sandwiches dipped in maple syrup; palatable but imprecise.

Three elements came awfully close. In fact take a different direction with the direction, make a couple of cast changes and presto! Coward would have emerged revived and well and living at the Belfry.

The elements are, first, the polished enchanting performance of Sheila Junor-Moore as the elegant but hot-tempered Amanda, and second, Ken MacDonald's fine uncluttered set design. In Act I a terrace outside twin honeymoon suites overlooking the Mediterranean, a remarkably smooth and ingenious change takes place to transport us to the drawing room of an apartment in Paris for the rest of the evening.

One of the wittiest, most compact and brilliantly constructed of Coward's suave champagne comedies, Private Lives could be described as a comedy of errors in dumping and taking marital partners. Amanda and Elyot Chase, after five years of divorce, have each married new partners then rediscover each other as neighbors in the adjoining suites. Love blooms anew and they leave for Paris pursued by the abandoned spouses.

After that it's a checkerboard of idyllic love, angry bickering and raging battle.

Director Timothy Bond has missed the key to styling this play which is even funnier when it is played with typically British restraint.

Bond has allowed the production's quality to become too often strident and coarse-grained, at which point the style disappears completely.

Despite all this Junor-Moore almost always manages to hold on to Coward with her delectable performance and David Renton as Elyot comes close to matching her, especially in the second act.

The pompous, rather ridiculous character of Victor, Amanda's new husband, while it eludes Brian Torpe at first, comes through quite effectively in the final scenes but Melody Ryane as the new wife, Sybil, is a piece of miscasting.

Nevertheless, flawed though it is, this Belfry production has a lot — such as pacing, tempo and visual pleasure going for it.

Stravinsky festival opens in London

LONDON (AP) — An 18-month festival of the complete works of Igor Stravinsky opens today in London.

"There has never been anything remotely on this scale before, and to the best of my knowledge, it's the first time every work by a composer with an output the size of Stravinsky's has ever been done anywhere," said British conductor David Atherton, director of the Stravinsky Festival.

The festival boasts nine British premieres and two works being performed for the first time — the solo arrangement of the Marseillaise, the French national anthem, played by Korean violinist Kyung-Wha Chung, and Song Without Name for two bassoons.

Stravinsky died in New York in 1971 at the age of 88 and is buried in Venice. Bridging the gap between the 19th century and the avant garde, he is hailed by many as the greatest composer of the 20th century.

Nancy White debut success in Ottawa

By JAMES NELSON
Canadian Press

Nancy White made her debut at the National Arts Centre (NAC) recently and was acclaimed as "possibly one of the hottest, new talents Canada has seen in years." And it was all, apparently, a surprise to the arts centre itself.

She is a composer-singer-comic who has built up a small but enthusiastic following among listeners to the Sunday Morning news commentary program on CBC Radio — not, one would think, the widest possible show-business exposure.

She arrived at the NAC as a guest artist on a program put together by Hagood Hardy, Toronto composer of The Homecoming, the lyrical piano piece that swept both American and Canadian record charts just at a time when they needed instrumental relief from rock and disco singers.

The arts centre gave her no special publicity, and one information officer said he knew no more about her than the one-line mention in publicity for Hardy. It was Hardy who booked her as part of his show.

She held the stage alone for more than half an hour with a line of saucy chatter and songs, accompanying herself on piano and guitar, and won applause almost as enthusiastic as that given Hardy's own finale, The Homecoming.

Her songs first surprised and then drew laughter from the civil service city's audience, songs about suburbia and the boring jobs of a government file clerk, stories about the Mounties and the Post Office, about the Queen and about the newest teenage idol, Prince Andrew.

Prince Andrew, she sang, is a teenage prince, "just a normal boy with a Mountie chaperone."

Kaye humors cardinal

TORONTO (CP) — Danny Kaye, the red-headed master of mimicry, has been presented with the Science and Humanities Award of the Weizmann Institute of Science, an Israeli research facility.

Gerald Emmett Cardinal Carter, in crimson robe and skullcap, told the predominantly Jewish audience, "I notice I am one of the few people wearing a yarmulke tonight."

The Push-Button Gang... it was their first and last job.

BIDDING QUIZ

Partner bids One Spade, both sides vulnerable, and you have a part-score of 40. What would you bid now with each of the following hands?

1. ♠ 83 ♡Q7652 ◇A64 ♣KQ8
2. ♠ Q752 ♡AKJ3 ◇Q76 ♣J4
3. ♠ Q96 ♡KQ4 ◇AJ9 ♣AJ87
4. ♠ 74 ♡J73 ◇Q973 ♣J952
5. ♠ K8653 ♡AQJ96 ◇J8 ♣10

1. One notrump. Without the part-score two hearts would be perfectly normal, but with it the correct response is one notrump. This is because partner may pass two hearts with indifferent trump support. — since a game contract has been reached — and your hearts here are simply not substantial enough to risk a pass. There is no chance of partner's passing one notrump, since such a response is forcing with a part score of 40.

2. Two spades. Ordinarily, you'd respond three spades, but since a jump to three with a part-score of 40 would constitute a slam try, you bid only two. Two hearts is of course out of the question with only a four-card suit.

Change the club jack to the king and you'd have a proper three-spade bid. Such a jump would indicate interest in a slam, but would not be forcing.

3. Three notrump. This is also not forcing, but is highly invitational to a slam. The indicated point count is 17 or 18. Three notrump guarantees strength in the unbid suits and balanced distribution.

One notrump. Without a part-score you'd pass, because game would seem too remote to justify keeping the bidding alive. But with a 40 part-score the requirements for a response are lower than the usual 6-point minimum expected for a one notrump response. Since you don't have to climb as high as usual to reach a game, you lower your sights accordingly.

5. Three spades. Here you make a slam try that is based on the attractive distribution. True, there are only 11 highcard points, but a slam is within reach even opposite a minimum opening bid. Thus, partner needs little more than the ace of spades, king of hearts and ace of diamonds to be a favorite for twelve tricks.

It would be unwise to respond two hearts for the reasons previously given, or to respond three hearts — which would be a jump-shift and 100 per cent forcing. You have the values that entitle you to suggest a slam, but not the values to insist upon one.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Saturday, October 6, 1979
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be persistent in search for truth. Cycle is such that you get your way by making personal appearances and appeals. Look behind the scene. You'll gain as result of clandestine meeting. Pisces, Virgo natives figure prominently.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): For valuable hint, study Aries message. You gain support from unorthodox source. A private conference results in green light for your aspirations. Older individual lends benefit of experience and supports your efforts. Relationship intensifies—it is all or nothing.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You win friends and influence people. Popularity soars; many come to you for solutions to their problems. Love plays paramount role. Aries, Taurus persons figure in your personal scenario. You complete assignment and as result a wish comes true.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Organizational shuffle leads to greater independence for you. Know it and take cold plunge into future. There is plenty of room for you at top. Show that you can be original as well as conservative. Numerous benefits accrue.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Fears, doubts can be eradicated. You now have definite proof that recent move was beneficial. Cancer, Aquarius individuals play key roles. Accent on long-distance communication, publishing and fine points of law. You are rid of unnecessary burden.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Put a halt to extravagance perpetrated by one close to you. Dig beneath layers of superficiality. You can solve a mystery—when you do, you'll be on road to fulfillment. Gemini, Sagittarius natives figure in scenario. You "locate" secret adversary.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Go slow, attend to details and read between the lines. Someone is trying to tell you something—study Virgo message for specific hint. Accent on public response to your efforts. One who claims to be an ally may unwittingly block progress.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Pay heed to suggestions concerning basic services, pets, employment and dependents. A Sagittarian could show way to increase profits. Check records for medical-dental appointments. Improve self-image. Member of opposite sex pays "fascinating" compliment.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Loneliness need no longer be your companion. Remodeling, decoration, possible change of residence—these are highlighted. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio persons play lively roles. You'll be happier at home.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Get valid appraisal of recent acquisition. You could be on verge of striking pay dirt. Be confident, insist on factual data and avoid self-deception. See situations and people as they actually exist. The number 7 figures prominently.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Study material at hand. Don't attempt to skip essentials. You are on verge of increasing income potential. Message could lead to short trip—be flexible, but don't scatter forces. You have support of one in position to "pull strings."

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Roadblock to money gain is removed—cash flow resumes. Aries, Libra persons play paramount roles. One who aided you in past will now seek your guidance. Adhere to principles of Golden Rule. Member of opposite sex does care and makes no secret of it.

IF OCTOBER 6 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are artistic, creative, have "sweet tooth" and an unusual voice. You recently made serious domestic decision and adjustment. Yes, you did the right thing—know it and stop brooding. You have instinctive understanding of music and psychology. You possess power to sway people and to promote special causes. Taurus, Scorpio individuals play key roles in your life. November could be one of your most memorable months of 1979, a year featuring establishment of home and family.

Tony nodded. "Sure. Do you want it?"

"I know it, and it's an interesting one," the boy replied. "The complete number is just one less than two hundred times the four-digit part."

What was that seven-digit number?

Thanks for idea to P. C. Mehta, Toronto, Ontario.

Yesterday's answer: SLOB was 5784 (BOB 484, a perfect square).

Seniors press for pensions with indexing

WINNIPEG (CP) — Introduction of portable, indexed pensions for all Canadians is among the demands that a group of Manitoba senior citizens will make to the federal and provincial governments, following a three-day conference here.

The seniors also want an end to pension-plan inequities which reduce payments for some and exclude others altogether.

"The plans discriminate against housewives and part-time workers," said a delegate at the end of the conference Thursday.

The session was called to allow senior citizens to discuss their concerns with social service workers and government officials.

In workshops Thursday, the seniors also recommended that school children be taught about financial planning for retirement.

"Kids have to be educated very early that being older is part of being a person," said Gordon Hancock of the University of Manitoba's continuing education department.

"They have to think about retirement at a young age, so they know the options," Hancock said.

A third proposal was for the right of individuals to make their own decisions on retirement age.

Senior citizens from all over Manitoba attended and voted before the conference ended to set up their own provincial newsletter.

'No-strings' foreign aid to go

TORONTO (UPC) — The Conservative government is reassessing Canada's foreign aid to Third World nations and involvement in United Nations peacekeeping programs, External Affairs Minister Flora MacDonald said Thursday.

She said a revamped foreign policy might concentrate more on relations with the United States and trade with Pacific Rim nations, and less on no-strings aid that brings few economic and political returns.

"Ever since the Second World War, Canada has been cultivating the image of an international nice guy," she told the Empire Club in Toronto. "We're friends to everyone — the honest brokers.

"I cannot help wondering whether the emphasis and priorities of Canadian foreign policy are really serving our best interests in this substantially changed world," MacDonald said.

"Have we taken into account the economic returns Canada may expect in both the short and the long term? How good are we at ... actually assessing real development in the recipient countries, and of doing ourselves some good at the same time?

"Would we be more responsible ... as international citizens if we concentrated our attention in fewer countries or in fewer fields so that our impact could be greater?"

She singled out Pakistan for criticism, recalling that the non-aligned nations conference in Havana last month "cheerfully branded us as imperialists.

"Pakistan is one of the very largest recipients of our aid programs. But it led the attack. Not only that, but it is a country whose head of government, before he was executed, said that he would rather reduce his country to eating grass than give up the right to develop a nuclear bomb.

"Is it really the right thing to do, to divorce aid policy entirely from the rest of our relations, both political and economic, with the country concerned?" she asked.

She also wondered whether Canada should be "so deeply" involved in international peacekeeping operations and in attempts by western countries to help Namibia gain its independence from South Africa.

"Do Canadians really care?" she asked.

Drawing applause from the Empire Club, she insisted that "our relations with the United States are so enormously important that they just must be a first priority."

She suggested Canada develop "really solid economic ties" with Mexico, Brazil, Venezuela, and fast-growing countries on the Pacific Rim.

MacDonald promised that the foreign policy review would be finished quickly by the parliamentary committee on external affairs and national defence, and asked for input from individuals and organizations.

It's expropriation for Que. asbestos

QUEBEC (CP) — The Quebec government will move to expropriate Asbestos Corp. Ltd. from its private owner, the American multinational General Dynamics Corp., Finance Minister Jacques Parizeau announced today.

But Parizeau told a news conference that the expropriation would not proceed "in a savage manner." This was in conformity with promises already made in hearings before Quebec Superior Court.

Terms of the expropriation were not immediately clear, but it appeared the value of the company's Quebec assets would be determined by the courts.

Earlier, sources close to the provincial cabinet indicated Quebec had been prepared to pay more than $42 a share — its supposedly final offer — to buy a majority interest in Asbestos Corp.

General Dynamics rejected the $42-a-share bid, which works out to a total price of about $62 million, on Thursday. The company had been asking $100 a share in its public statements, although observers in the financial community believed it might be willing to settle for less.

Parizeau made the offer of $42 a share public on Sept. 21, saying it was "irrevocable." The offer expired Thursday with the company refusal to sell.

Sources said the government might have been willing to offer more money under certain circumstances, according to a complicated formula to be worked out with General Dynamics.

But the announcement of expropriation appeared to rule out the possibility of any further negotiations.

One well-informed source said Quebec had been prepared at one point in negotiations to pay a base price for the shares, which could have been supplemented by additional payments calculated on the basis of the company's performance over a period of years.

Sources in General Dynamics and the Montreal financial community have also told reporters that the two sides discussed a "share price escalation formula." But this compromise solution fell through.

Metric study planned

OTTAWA (CP) — The government has set up a committee to study how well the public has converted to metric.

Ron Huntington, minister of state for small business and industry, indicated that metric is here to stay regardless of the committee's recommendations.

The recommendations are expected at the end of this year, he said.

"I am convinced that the present and future will demand that Canadians accept the fact metric is here to stay."

The committee, headed by Gordon MacEachern, president of the Economics Research Council and F. Rex Wirts, a Vancouver marketing consultant, is to assess the role of the metric commission.

Energy plans to dominate first Clark throne speech

OTTAWA (CP) — The Conservative government, still grappling with the explosive oil-pricing issue, will announce new incentives for consumers to conserve energy in Tuesday's policy-previewing speech from the throne.

A beefed-up home insulation program, new commitments to the development of solar energy and federal funding for alternative energy sources in the oil-dependent Atlantic region are included in the package, government sources said Thursday.

Meanwhile, behind-the-scenes talks with the provinces on a new formula for oil price increases are entering the crucial stage as Prime Minister Clark seeks middle ground in the dispute between oil producing and consuming provinces.

The Clark government has set a goal of energy self-sufficiency by 1990 and will warn consumers in the strongest possible terms that energy conservation is a must in the coming decade, the sources said. But there will be no mandatory programs.

The most controversial energy-related issue since Clark assumed power has been the minority government's pledge to go ahead with its election campaign promise to dismantle Petro-Canada, the state oil company.

A study group appointed by Energy Minister Ray Hnatyshyn is to recommend how to approach the matter in a report due Oct. 15. Hnatyshyn has said the government will not be bound by the findings.

The Liberals and New Democrats have also stated their opposition to the government's plan to seek immediate and more rapid increases in domestic oil prices to move them toward world levels.

A third issue emerged this week when it was revealed Canada lost a contract valued at more than $1 billion for the sale of a package of nuclear technology to Argentina. The Conservatives and Liberals are blaming each other for the lost deal and Commons shouting matches are anticipated next week.

The government intends to keep in place legislation passed just prior to the election giving Ottawa wide-ranging powers to allocate oil supplies in the event of national shortages.

Assurances that Ottawa is monitoring the production of home heating oil to ensure an adequate supply for Quebec and the Maritimes this winter are also planned.

Federal officials are anxious to get the message across that any disruption in the already-tight oil supply situation could lead to shortages and lineups similar to those experienced in the United States this summer.

But the biggest headache for the government is finding a way to offset the impact of lost purchasing power for consumers that would be brought on by higher oil prices.

abby

Dear Abby:

Our 25-year-old daughter (I'll call her Ruth) is coming home to visit and wants to bring her girlfriend.

Last year Ruth told us that she is a lesbian. We are sick about it and are praying it won't last.

We can't understand how this happened. We raised three other children, and they turned out normal.

We're afraid if we tell Ruth she can't bring her girlfriend she might not come home at all. We love her regardless, and don't want to drive her away.

Our problem is what to do about the sleeping arrangements. If Ruth were normal, we wouldn't put her up with her boyfriend because we don't approve of pre-marital sex. But how about Ruth and her girlfriend? We don't approve of their brand of sex, even though they couldn't marry if they wanted to. Please help us.

Confused

Dear Confused:

If you love your daughter, make her girlfriend welcome. Put them up in separate beds and don't make an issue of it.

Dear Abby:

I just read the letter in your column from Sister to her brother concerning their mother. Sister said her brother wanted to put their invalid mother in a home 10 years ago, but she wouldn't do it, then she goes on to list the hardships she's endured caring for their mother all these years.

Abby, I work in a care centre, also called a nursing home. It's clean, modern and odorless. It has 24-hour nursing care, physical therapy to keep residents as fit as possible, and recreational therapy that includes activities such as shopping trips, holiday parties, bowling, crafts, music, study, church services, Bingo, movies, etc.

Dear Abby:

Please don't throw this away thinking it's from some nut. I'm serious. I have a dream. I want to be married on ice skates at my favorite skating rink on Valentine's Day in 1981.

My problem is, where do I go from here? I'm a figure skater; that's why I want to get married on skates.

I don't know how to go about it. Or do you think my dream is too weird?

In the eye, not the camera

By JANE COVERNTON

"This photograph captures a moment in the life of a child and suggests innocence," wrote the photographer, Freeman Patterson.

"Note that the expanse of rocks and the girl's small space in the composition strengthen the sense of her privacy."

Patterson uses his photograph in his new book, Photography and the art of seeing to show how an emotional quality translates into composition.

He is an award winning Canadian photographer. In 1975 Patterson became one of only 200 living people to win the highest award of the Federation Internationale de l'Art Photographique. And he is a member of the Royal Canadian Academy of Art.

Despite all the awards, Patterson is no photographic elitist.

Page after page of stunning pictures coupled with simple straight forward advice on how to see — not how to set lenses and apertures — make the book an amateur's temptation into the expensive world of camera technology.

But Patterson emphasized during a recent visit to Victoria that it's not necessary to junk the Instamatic.

"I hope the book will help even if you don't have a camera at all. I hope that it would help people to take a few moments to see the light on their green salad, the butter melting on their toast," he says.

In fact, he says, he's not even interested in equipment.

"Often the desire for fancy equipment becomes the excuse for not seeing."

Patterson says photographers constantly put up barriers, making excuses for not seeing.

In his classes and in this book, he teaches how to break those barriers.

The first step is "letting go of self".

"You want to make it in a competition. You can't handle the equipment. You make negative self-judgements.

"You have to get rid of irrelevant self-concerns. I would like people to take the finest photo, but not to get upset."

Another barrier is being straight-jacketed by rules.

Patterson suggests consciously breaking all the rules to see what happens.

"Try not holding the camera steady. Jump up and down with it."

Small girl from the book Photography and the art of seeing

Patterson . . . no elitist

Then there's "thinking sideways".

He has his students shoot 36 exposures of a garden hose or some other mundane object until they despair and finally see something else.

"It means giving up your normal premise and taking up new ground. It's not a garden hose but green surf."

Patterson started "thinking sideways" suddenly, six or seven years ago.

He had been shooting spiders' webs for years, fascinated by their beauty and dissatisfied with the results.

"I had so many pictures of spiders' webs I wanted to gag. They all looked the same. Photographing my favorite thing in the same way almost spoiled it for me."

The first thing he did that day was photograph the webs from the side, looking from an edge.

There followed a series of stunning photos, some of them included in the book, from odd angles, with strange light, which he thinks capture how he feels about spiders' webs.

Feeling is perhaps the most important element of the kind of photography Patterson writes about.

Patterson has religious training. To him, religion is any passionate concern — the kind of concern that photography is for him.

"To me the real atheist is the person who comes home from work and plunks down in front of the tv with a beer. Someone who is passionately unconcerned about anything."

World ills weigh on young minds

TORONTO (CP) — An informal talk session among 21 children conducted recently shows youngsters in Toronto see the world as dangerous and confusing.

The children are fearful of the world's violence and inequalities, its depressed economy and threatened ecology. They also feel that no one really cares about them.

The children, between the ages of six and 12, were from a wide variety of backgrounds.

Some of their parents were Canadian-born while others were from Italy, Africa, the Netherlands, the West Indies, Pakistan, Yugoslavia, India and Northern Ireland.

Their parents include professionals, store and office managers and skilled and unskilled workers. Annual family incomes ranged from less than $10,000 to more than $25,000.

Two of the youngsters were from single-parent homes. Eight of the children's mothers are homemakers, another eight work part-time and five full-time.

None of the children had met each other before the session but their feelings are similar.

"The world can be dangerous," said one boy. "You can get hurt or killed, accidentally or on purpose."

The children did not seem shocked or surprised by violence. Many recounted a violent incident of which they had been either a witness or a victim.

All showed fear of being attacked, especially by teenagers.

"These teen-agers hang around the shopping plaza," one child said. "I could eat there but I won't go there because they just beat up on kids for no reason."

A nine-year-old boy described an incident involving another boy he had witnesses in his neighborhood: "Other kids tease him and he really wants to kill the kid. Kill doesn't mean kill with a knife so he's stabbed, just I'll beat him up and make him cry."

The boys considered some emotions acceptable — anger, aggression, competitiveness, male camaraderie, scorn. But they had trouble expressing tenderness, fear or sadness.

Sexism and the feeling that to be a man was to be aggressive, was already ingrained in the youngest of the children.

"Boys and men are not supposed to cry," said a six-year-old boy.

"It's silly to sew, only girls sew," said another.

The boys sat together and dominated the discussions. They were willing to listen to each other but not to the girls.

The girls sat with hands neatly folded, feet together, and offered little challenge to the boys' exuberance.

The children were also aware of racism.

A black child told of being beaten up because of his color and another spoke of constant racist bullying from a teen-ager.

Growing up seemed to mean gaining access to all the forbidden things: smoking, drinking, gambling, sex, swearing, making decisions, staying up late and beating people up.

All said their parents set bad examples or none at all.

An 11-year-old girl recalled her mother telling her not to swear: "I'll do all the swearing around this house."

Small face big concern for teenager

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

I have a small face. My family and friends think I am pretty. But that doesn't do me any good because I am bothered by a small bump on the bridge of my nose. I also feel that the tip of my nose is thicker than I would like it to be.

When I ask my parents about it they say I am pretty enough and that I should forget about it. But I can't forget about it because every time I look at myself in the mirror, all I see is the bump. Can you tell me how difficult a plastic operation is? Is it safe? Can I be sure that I would like it after it was fixed? I am 18. If I am going to have it done, is this a good time to do it?

Miss D.B.

Dear Miss B.:

There was a time not long ago when plastic or cosmetic surgery was reserved for people in the theatre and films, people whose features were constantly under scrutiny by the general public. In recent years, however, a transition has been made to include among the candidates for such surgery virtually anyone who wants to improve her or his physical image.

Self-esteem, self-image, and liking oneself are important for personal happiness. It is for this reason that one carefully chooses clothes, maintains a meticulous hair style, and artistically applies cosmetics to enhance beauty. It is not surprising, therefore, that cosmetic, plastic or esthetic surgery has blossomed into a significant surgical specialty. The secrecy that once surrounded a cosmetic operation is now being replaced by a casual attitude of frankness and a general acceptance that such surgery is just another way of improving one's appearance.

The fact that your family and friends think you are pretty apparently does not satisfy your own view of yourself. Since it is so distressing to you, you should induce your family to seek consultation with a plastic surgeon who can best evaluate the shape of your nose and tell you whether plastic surgery would be beneficial to you.

The operation is not a difficult one. It is done painlessly under either local or general anesthesia. It is a remarkably safe operation.

Will you like it? That is probably the most important question you asked. In most instances patients operated on by competent plastic surgeons are happy and gratified by the new shape of their nose.

Before the operation, you and your family should discuss every possible phase of this problem with your doctor. There are some people with deep-seated psychological problems who are not happy with the results, but it is unlikely that has anything to do with the quality of their new appearance.

Encyclopedia buy should be studied

Joan Watson for consumers

If you have kids, you have probably been approached by a representative of many of the half dozen or so encyclopedia publishers in Canada. Or you might have seen their ads in popular magazines, or their booths at a fair.

The pitch is usually aimed at parents who want to give their children a head start — and what parent doesn't?

But when it comes right down to it, at prices ranging from $50 to over $1,000 for multi-volume sets, it can be a pretty expensive head start. And many experts question whether an encyclopedia in the home gives a student any real advantage at all.

Gary Hunt, Chairman of the Elementary Education Department of the University of Toronto encourages students of all ages to use public library and school library encyclopedias first. "Determine your child's need first," he advised. "Don't buy one right away."

Librarian Mary Short, of the same department, agreed. "Most families won't use one enough — especially not the specialties."

If you have easy access to a public library, it likely is not necessary to have a set in your own home. If not, and you think your family will use a home encyclopedia, good consumer practices will help you in choosing one.

Experts estimate that our knowledge is doubling every ten years. Thus a good encyclopedia with annual supplements has a limited usefulness. After several years, even with yearbooks, it is difficult to get truly up to date information, though that is a major reason for using an encyclopedia.

So if you are buying a set for your children who are in grade school, it would be unwise to buy an expensive adult encyclopedia, thinking that they could use it when they get to higher grades. The books may be out of date by then.

Most companies continue to market door-to-door, sometimes using questionable hard sell techniques. A recent study by a major U.S. encyclopedia publisher confirmed that encyclopedia salesmen have a reputation for those negative qualities. As a result, they are turning to mail order marketing more and more.

Telephone soliciting is widely used too. And most publishers will set up booths at regional fairs or exhibitions, perhaps holding a draw to give away a free encyclopedia. Those who fill in their names and addresses are likely to be called upon by salesmen.

Whatever you decide, do not buy anything this expensive on a salesman's first visit. Listen to what he has to say, get all the facts about the cost, including shipping and handling charges, make sure they offer a yearbook for multi-volume sets, then arrange to talk to him again.

In the meantime, go to your nearest public library. Check to see if they have that particular set. Go through it carefully with your children, while you're not under any pressure from the salesman. Make sure they can read and understand a few articles.

Ask your librarian. He or she will show you reference works that evaluate such books.

Ask your child's teacher whether he or she thinks it would be helpful. Talk to any friends you know who have owned an encyclopedia.

Don't be taken in by offers for free bookshelves or trial offers. You can't get something for nothing, and marketing experts know that once the set is in your home, you are not likely to return it — even if you don't want it.

If you have already signed a contract to purchase an encyclopedia, and have since changed your mind, check with the consumer ministry. They can advise you as to whether your "cooling off period" has expired.

youth

Dear Dr. Levine:

I am 16 and I don't want to live anymore. Life isn't precious to me. It has been so hard for me. I am always depressed — not just lately but ever since I can remember.

Ever since I came to Canada, everything changed for me. I never knew my father until I came here and I wish I never did. I have been under too much pressure — pressure from everyone and everything. I don't understand why people expect so much of one person, like my parents, friends, practically everybody. I can't take it anymore.

I am asking for help. I have no one to turn to. Sometimes I think I am going crazy. Maybe asking for help is like asking for another chance at life. But whatever, I'm really scared.

I've never stopped thinking of suicide but every time I do, I become sad for my mother. She is the only person that I am thinking of at present. She herself has had a tough life and I don't want to have a life like hers.

Please try to help me. What should I do? Do I need psychiatric help? Am I crazy? Where do I get the help? How do I go about telling my problems to a stranger when it took me this long to open up this little to you?

Answer: I am going to come right out and say you should get yourself some professional help soon. While the problems of your childhood and present life do contribute to your feeling so miserable, they are not in themselves enough to do this to everybody in similar circumstances.

You are feeling particularly oppressed and stressed by the pressures that you perceive to be impinging on you. Your sense of being overwhelmed comes through loud and clear in your letter. You talk of going crazy, of suicide, of not being able to take it anymore.

And I agree — you shouldn't take it anymore. You must get help from a trained psychotherapist who works with people your age. You can get referred to one from a school counsellor, a family doctor, minister, etc. You can also go to a youth clinic or drop-in centre and ask one of the officials there to direct you to help.

Now all this isn't easy, but you don't seem to have any alternative. Once you get a psychiatrist (for example) it will entail some work on your part. You are right, that it may be difficult for you to open up at first, but you'll find that it will get easier as time goes on. Go to it!

Dear Dr. Cotter:

I am a very confused 15-year-old girl. I was brought up to believe in God and love everybody. But I feel that all my luck has gone down the drain.

Growing up, being a teenager, is supposed to be the most exciting time of your life. When I was younger all I ever dreamed of was going to high school and to the sock hops with all the cute guys that the Grade 8 girls always talked about.

Now I'm in high school and I feel the same way, but it just hasn't happened. I feel like an ugly duckling, though my friends say I'm pretty. I haven't even got a steady boyfriend yet.

Boys have asked me out but I always said no. I don't go for necking behind the school like the other girls. My mum brought me up differently, she told me what would happen.

One boy I that I met this year was very, very special. Every time he smiled at me or tried to talk to me I froze and alwys tried to get away. I guess I'm insecure. Every night I pray to God to help me. He has helped me before. Maybe He will help me again.

Answer: I think your problem is not luck, nor is it whether God will intervene. Your problem is that you are filled with romantic ideas about sock hops and cute boys, but your mother has left you with the impression that sex is "something nasty in the woodshed," and so you freeze in the presence of a potential boyfriend, though you want to have 'ne. The more you try the harder it is.

Try to be more realistic about yourself. Believing in God and loving everybody is something you will not be able to keep up unless you learn that God made sex, but sex can make friends, enemies, babies, pain, joy, unselfishness and tragedy, and you have to know how to walk like a grown person and not like the paid actors on the TV ads for the Pepsi generation.

Dear Dr. Powell:

Recently you said in your column that yeast infection of the vagina is transmitted by sexual intercourse. Is that the only way it spreads? If not, about what percentage is contracted this way?

Answer: A yeast infection caused by an organism also known as candida or monilia is very common. The yeast organism is present in other parts of the body and can cause infections elsewhere in addition to the vagina. The symptoms of itchiness and irritation are accompanied by a profuse discharge.

While the organism may be spread through sexual contact, certain conditions may increase the likelihood of the organism causing an infection. Pregnancy, oral contraceptives and a recent course of antobiotics for an infection in another part of the body will affect the vagina and make a woman prone to vaginitis.

So it is difficult to estimate how many infections are spread through sexual contact.

Young readers' questions on human relations and sex are answered by a panel including Marion Powell, physician; Graham Cotter, clergyman; Dr. Saul Levine, psychiatrist, and social worker Bruce Vichert.

Send questions to Youth Clinic, The Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria V8W 2N4. Readers wishing to talk with someone about their problems can call NEED at 386-6233.

Nun marks papal visit

By JOHN GOUDAS

With the Pope paying a fall visit, Days of Our Lives steals a beat on competitors by featuring a Horton who wears the cloth. Lanna Saunders' Sister Marie Horton is front and centre in the plotting on Days, a character suggested by Fred Silverman, a man who apparently keeps tabs on everything except NBC parking.

Fred came up with the idea of a nun on the show late in the spring after perusing the Horton family tree, but Fred can't get credit for cashing in on the Pope's visit. Writer Elizabeth Harrower promptly fleshed out the character of Sister Marie, and had the good lady on the air by mid-August.

Marie has returned to Salem in time to offer spiritual comfort to local ladies in distress. Since all the women on Days are knee-deep in troubles of one kind or other, Sister Marie will have her hands full.

So far Marie has been able to offer some solace to Amanda, shattered by the loss of her child, and a resulting hysterectomy. Whether the child's father was Greg or Amanda's new lover, Chris, is debatable, but the loss put the amorous Chris into a tail-spin.

Marie has also been involved with the disfigured, frantic Julie, still on the run from husband Doug, unable to get up the nerve for a second skin graft operation. And with the help of Jordan, Marie keeps young Cathy, a newcomer in town, from making mistakes.

Elizabeth Harrower allows us to look into Sister Marie's past following a run-in with the mysterious Alex Marshall. We see her in the hospital chapel praying for guidance after reliving a terrifying sexual fantasy with none other than Alex Marshall.

This month, the plotting becomes juicier for Sister Marie, meaning dramatic air time for newcomer Lanna Saunders. Ms. Saunders is a native New Yorker, an original member of the Lincoln Center Repertory Company, a young lady with impressive stage credits in shows like Sunrise at Campobello, After the Fall, and Streetcar Named Desire. Prime time audiences have seen Lanna in the Ruby and Oswald movie, and segments of Barnaby Jones and The Six Million Dollar Man.

An alumnus of New York's High School of Performing Arts, Lanna can also speak Russian, but somehow Elizabeth Harrower hasn't figured a way to slip that into the show, yet.

Channel Chatter: Last Friday, viewers of All My Children were probably startled to see erudite talk-show host Dick Cavett appearing as himself in a scene with Susan Lucci's Erica. Well, Dick will be back October 9 as the celebrity guest at Erica's new disco...

Newcomer to the Days of Our Lives cast is Cindy Daly, a 21-year-old actress who hails from Seattle, Wash. Cindy plays the role of Cathy Breton, a trouble-prone teenager who comes to town to work as a waitress. Cindy's TV credits include small roles in Barnaby Jones, Operation Runaway, Eight Is Enough, and many commercials...

1940s' romantic film idol Farley Granger (Our Very Own, The North Star, and Roseanna McCoy),who may be remembered from his short run as Will Vernon on One Life to Live, has joined *Edge of Night*in the role of Trent Archer...

Plot Portents: After years of losing, Liz Foster may win a round on The Young and the Restless. Lorie and Lance are together for the moment, and Casey and Brock appear to be building a solid relationship.

Mystery man Alex Marshall turns out to have been cruel to Sister Marie way back when on Days of Our Lives. Rejected by Amanda, Chris is ripe for a reunion with Mary and Lee is making headway with Doug.

volunteering

People at NEED need your time

Volunteer work has a lot to offer — flexibility for example. Volunteers can choose a volunteer position which suits the amount of time available and which can be accommodated with other commitments.

Volunteers plan holidays for themselves, visit with relatives and take time to care for their own sick children. These activities do not interfere with the volunteer's ability to continue with voluntary work. The rewards of a meaningful job, without undue pressure, make volunteering an enjoyable occupation for the active person.

Who needs you now?

NEED Crisis Line is looking for men and women in their middle years who are caring and able to listen without judging or giving advice. An intensive training program prepares volunteers for work on the Line. Volunteers have found that the communication skills they develop at NEED enhance other areas of their lives as well.

A community fundraising organization urgently needs volunteers to help staff a booth and sell raffle tickets. Volunteers can offer as much time as they are able to give — even an hour would be helpful until October 31. If you can spare some time to help with this activity please call 386-2269 as soon as possible.

A Fairfield area woman has very little vision. She needs a volunteer to take her out shopping, to the bank, and to medical appointments. The times for these outings could be arranged at the convenience of the volunteers.

Volunteer drivers are needed in the Saanich Peninsula area. Drivers are indispensable to elderly and disabled residents who must do their shopping and get to important appointments but are unable to drive or take a bus.

A community fitness and recreation centre needs volunteers to assist with their gym program for pre-school children on Wednesday mornings. The organization also needs instructors and assistants for a variety of courses for young people and children.

Librarians are needed in two hospital settings. One of these positions requires a trained librarian. For the other, previous training is unnecessary and a number of volunteers are needed.

A mental health agency needs a volunteer to supervise members who are involved in a work experience program in the Saanich area. The members will be operating a canteen and the volunteer would accompany and support them.

Volunteer tutors would be welcome in a variety of settings: elementary schools, alternative schools for adolscents, and English classes for new Canadians. Most of these positions involve assisting students on a one-to-one basis. Teaching experience is not required and volunteers are given orientation and training by the instructor.

For more information on these and a multitude of other volunteer positions, contact the Victoria Volunteer Bureau at 386-2269.

WHEELS
by Mike Lamm

Dear Mike: The gas tank in our 1979 Malibu wagon builds up pressure after a long trip. If I remove the gas cap to refuel the car, a great burp of air and sopmetimes gasoline rushes out. If I let the car sit, the tank hisses and bubbles like a hot radiator for about five minuts. What causes this, and what's to be done about it? — Tanked.

Dear Tanked: Your wagon uses a non-vented gas cap, but the cap does have a 2-way relief valve that's supposed to compensate for excess pressure and vacuum. It's possible that this valve is stuck. Modern auto gas tanks are subject to constant pressure changes, and normally the tank-to-carbon-cannister vapor line will provide relief. Check that, too, for a kink or obstruction.

Dear Mike: I'm the unhappy owner of a 1973 Grand Prix. This car is sluggish and sometimes backfires at cruising speeds. I've had the engine tuned but now suspect a bad valve because of a light ticking sound. What do you say? — Sluggo.

Dear Sluggo: Checking out the valves is super-simple; any mechanic can do it in five minutes. But many other problems can cause the symptoms you describe. Even despite your recent tuneup, you could have ignition, carburetion, timing-chain, cam, or smog-system ills that would leave your engine as sluggish and hiccuppy as you describe.

Dear Mike: I have a 1976 Volare with the 318-inch V-8. The trouble is that the clutch won't release all the way and keeps slipping. I've had the disc replaced and also have taken the car back for several clutch adjustments. Nothing seems to help. — Slipper.

Dear Slipper: Some 1976 Aspens and Volares were put together at the factory with the wrong pedal assembly and release spring. See your Chrysler Corp. dealer and check parts numbers.

Dear Mike: Our 1975 Olds 98 makes a hissing sound, like a vacuum leak. Everything seems to be working fine. It's just annoying to have such a quiet car sound like a snake. Any clues? — Alger.

Dear Alger: If your Olds has cruise control, check the section of vacuum hose between the T-fitting and the cruise-control regulator. Sometimes this section of hose needs a second vacuum restrictor.

Pay TV possibly on air by end of 1980

OTTAWA (CP) — Pay television channels could be available towards the end of next year, Communications Minister David MacDonald said Thursday.

He told a press conference that federal government proposals for pay television will be placed before the provinces at a meeting in Toronto Oct. 15-16.

"I shall propose to provincial ministers a process of public consultation in resolving the issue of pay-TV in Canada," the minister said earlier in a speech to the Canadian Film and Television Association.

Asked to harden his statements at the press conference, MacDonald said flatly that he hopes the first licences for pay television outlets will be available within a year.

In what was billed by his department as a major speech on broadcasting, the minister ruffled no feathers when he said he was seeking the help of the broadcasting industry, the provinces and the general public for a comprehensive policy for Canadian television in the 1980s.

The central goal of the policy would be more and better Canadian television productions available to more people, MacDonald said.

"This would not mean that we would restrict in any way Canadians' right of access to the best programming the world has to offer," he said.

"It does mean, however, that we are determined to provide good, popular and varied programming with an assured place in the new television system of the 1980s."

MacDonald gave firm indications that he is more concerned now about programming and content than with the so-called hardware making up the delivery system.

In the satellite era, he said, there is no justification for any Canadian to be without an adequate range of broadcasting services.

The government also would be offering incentives for production of Canadian programming.

"The Federal Business Development Bank, the Small Businesses Loans Program and a range of federal industrial and export incentives could equally be more responsive to the needs of the television production industry," said the minister.

The CBC also would be expected to make greater use of independent program producers rather than rely so heavily on its own productions.

He said the ever-increasing number of television channels available could be an opportunity rather than a liability.

Program producers could make shows not only for mass audiences but for specialized ones.

At the press conference, he said he hopes to name a new chairman for the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications within a few weeks.

He also said some changes were planned for the commission to help it adjust to changing times.

A telecommunications bill placed three times before Parliament by the former Liberal government but never debated would be reintroduced by the Clark administration.

The proposed law, dealing with a wide range of telecommunications, would be changed from the Liberal proposals but MacDonald declined to spell out the changes. He said he wants the provinces to first see what the government proposes.

However, MacDonald said he will retain the Liberal intention in the bill giving the government power to make policy for the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission.

He said the commission had been painted into corners by having to make policy, which was the responsibility of government.

Governments must accept their own responsibility, he said.

We'll give them a chance, Trudeau says of Tories

OTTAWA (UPC) — Opposition leader Pierre Trudeau says the Liberals will give the minority Conservative government a chance to govern and not obstruct Prime Minister Joe Clark when Parliament opens next Tuesday.

"We should give the government a chance to govern," he told a news conference Thursday following a day-long strategy session with his 112-member caucus. "But there are certainly basic issues on which we believe . . . they would be governing to the damaging of Canada."

But NDP Leader Ed Broadbent said his party will move quickly to test the strength of the minority Conservative government over the controversial issue of the sale of Petro-Canada.

The Conservatives have been widely criticized for their plans to dismantle the federal oil company and has received several pieces of bad economic news, including the first trade deficit of the year announced Thursday.

"I think they're not dangling yet," Trudeau said when asked if the Liberals intended to give the government "enough rope to hang itself," a view expressed by some Liberal MPs.

"Apparently they (voters) didn't expect that much from Mr. Clark's government, and we certainly didn't, and we're getting what we expected," he said. "So why should we be disappointed?"

In addition to the disputes over the economy, which is predicted to slow down further this fall and winter, and Liberal opposition to dismantling PetroCanada, Trudeau also expressed alarm over a dilution of federal powers.

"This government is eroding the powers of the federal government," Trudeau said, commenting on Clark's announcement the previous day that the federal government would recognize provincial ownership of offshore mineral resources.

"The federal government will end up as nothing but a head waiter, taking the orders of the provinces," Trudeau said, resurrecting the warning he gave during last spring's federal election.

Trudeau also announced that the Liberals had seconded Prime Minister Clark's choice of Liberal MP James Jerome to continue as speaker of the House of Commons.

Broadbent told reporters after a day-long meeting of the party caucus that the 26 NDP members in the Commons will support a Liberal motion that calls for preservation of Petro-Canada.

And if the Liberals fail to present such a motion, Broadbent said his party will.

The opportunity would come next week during the debate which follows the throne speech.

UAW wildcat strikes sweep GM in Canada

TORONTO (CP) — More than 3,800 General Motors of Canada Ltd. workers were still off the job today in Quebec even though negotiators for the company and the United Auto Workers reached a proposed contract Thursday.

Robert White, Canadian director of the UAW, said negotiations continued overnight and today to resolve the walkout by 3,898 production workers at GM's assembly plant in Ste. Therese, Que.

"The national union has let us down again," said a local official at the St. Therese plant. "We won't go back to work until we get what we want."

Meanwhile, 2,000 GM workers at a Toronto van assembly plant who walked out off their jobs late Thursday have returned to work.

Spokesmen for GM and the UAW said the Toronto workers walked out because a ratification vote on the proposed three-year contract set for Sunday would interrupt the Thanksgiving Day holiday weekend.

White said the ratification vote for the Toronto plant will go ahead Sunday.

In Detroit, Ford Motor Co. and the United Auto Workers union reached tentative agreement on a new contract late Thursday, resolving last-minute problems that almost provoked an unwanted strike at the No. 2 automaker.

Four more Tories to Senate

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Joe Clark has named four more Conservatives to the Senate, bringing to 28 the number of Tories in the 104-seat, Liberal-dominated upper chamber.

The new appointees:

Heath McQuarrie of Prince Edward Island, long time MP who retired before the May 22 federal election.

Nathan Nurgitz, national president of the Conservative party in 1970 and 1971.

Cyril Sherwood of New Brunswick, former head of the provincial party.

William Doody, former Newfoundland cabinet minister.

The additions bring to nine the number of appointments to the upper chamber that Clark has made since his election victory May 22.

But the Conservatives still are far behind the Liberals. The House standing now is Conservative 28, Liberal 71, independent 2, independent Liberal 1, Social Credit 1 and vacant one, a Manitoba seat.

Executors hassle over Dief's files

OTTAWA (CP) — Keith Martin, executive assistant to the late John Diefenbaker, has applied to Surrogate Court to become an executor of the former prime minister's will.

Martin said in a telephone interview Thursday that although he is a literary executor, he cannot gain control of Diefenbaker's papers until the four executors are ready to relinquish them.

Martin and the executors began feuding over the former Conservative leader's estate even before Diefenbaker was buried Aug. 22.

The four executors are Senator David Walker, a public works minister in the Diefenbaker cabinet, Dr. Lewis Brand of Saskatoon, Joel Aldred of Port Perry, Ont., and Mr. Justice Edward Hughes of Saskatoon.

Martin's application is in the form of a caveat against probating Diefenbaker's will until he is named an executor.

A special institute called the Diefenbaker Centre has been built at the university in Saskatoon to house the Chief's papers.

Effective today.

BAWLF
. . . $4M condominium

Developer Bawlf returns

After a seven-year career in politics, Sam Bawlf is back in the development business with plans to build a $4 million condominium project on the Victoria waterfront on Wharf Street.

His newly-formed Bawlf Management Ltd. has bought an acre of property from developer Hans Hartwig, who abandoned plans last March to erect a retail-commercial-residential project on the site between Hartwig Court and McQuade's.

Financing has been organized for the 65-unit building, said Bawlf, and he hopes work can start this winter.

"We want to build within the stated objectives of the city, which is downtown housing," he said.

About two-thirds of the site, which has 300 feet of waterfront, would be retained as open space.

Zoning restrictions in the area limit new buildings to a height of 50 feet, no higher than McQuade's at the foot of Yates.

Construction details for his project have not been worked out yet but Bawlf said the size and finish of the building would be compatible with the old brick and stone commercial buildings along Wharf.

"My whole approach to this is in the spirit of co-operation. I realize there's been some controversy about the site."

Hartwig withdrew his plans for the property in a fit of anger last spring, claiming political interference had held up city hall's approval. The city said Hartwig's design would block any public access to the water.

Bawlf said there will be room for a 20-foot-wide public promenade along the harbor side of his project.

It's the first big new piece of construction for Bawlf, a former city alderman and cabinet minister.

He is best known for the sympathetic renovations he undertook on the Belmont building at Government and Humboldt, the Counting House cinema, the Law Courts in Bastion Square and the Market Square shopping centre, and is credited with saving the Crystal Garden.

Give thanks by planting

GARDENING
Hilda Beastall

Every day can be a day of Thanksgiving for the gardener who loves to grow plants. At this season, the results begin to pile up so that a special day is designated as Thanksgiving Day. As every person is dependent on the bounties of the earth for each meal, it is appropriate that we should all participate in the celebration.

In this coastal garden area, the day is not the end of everything but indeed the beginning of much more. It begins the season of planting new wonders to be grown for the future as we plan on ornamental shrubs and trees, as well as berried fruits for next year's taste delights.

Our Thanksgiving weekend is very often used for the major planting spree of the year. This weekend with the soil still warm from the summer sun, the ideal way of giving thanks is to get the planting done or at least well begun.

Another way of celebrating the event is to put in the daffodil and narcissus bulbs that may still be unplanted.

This is one of the gardener's most profound acts of faith — the consigning of bulbs to the darkness of good soil with the sure faith that spring will bring forth the glory of the perfect blooms. The nearest thing to it is the planting of potato pieces and harvesting a full crop from each one.

Even though we may need to gather the last of the tomatoes at the weekend to escape the first frost, we can be thankful for the long warm season which has brought a fine crop of healthful vine-ripened fruits to every gardener who grew them. Many have known the true flavor of ripe tomatoes for the first time.

If a greenhouse is part of the garden scene and there are helpers available, give each one a job to be done in the cleaning of the structure inside and out. Soap and water are the main tools, with scrub brushes for the benches. This will be in preparation for transplanting some of the started vegetable seedlings from the garden to the greenhouse beds and boxes to grow on during fall and early winter.

This can be done without heat. The glass structure offers protection from heavy rains, wind and several degrees of frost. A bench away from the side walls will be the warmest spot. Lettuce and similar salad greens can be well grown in four or five-inch deep flats (or boxes) of compost on these benches.

Dwarf green peas may be sown in them. Swiss chard and New Zealand spinach should do well in the shelter of the greenhouse and give a continuously producing crop if kept in use. Try various items which are known or believed to be tolerant of cool weather, you will have reason to be thankful when some of them succeed in providing fresh foods during periods when nothing is available from outdoors.

With a willing helper or two, this whole greenhouse project of extending the vegetable growing season by at least a few weeks, can be put into operation during the Thanksgiving holiday weekend. And that is something to be thankful for.

According to the size of greenhouse (or sunny glassed-in porch) herbs can be added for the extra flavorful green touch in winter.

Chives, parsley, chervil, sweet cicely are all useful, and decorative while they grow. Seedlings of your own, or small bought plants in containers will produce pickings all winter.

Small flowering plants such as fibrous begonias, lobelia, white alyssum will grow happily in small containers with a little shelter; the begonias do better in the porch for there the cool nights will be less felt.

For special pleasure, plant some of the tiny fall and winter crocuses in boxes. Their exquisitely marked and colored blooms will last longer and be pleasurably enjoyed at close range when grown on benches. If new to you, these will be reason for naother Thanksgiving Day later in the season.

Behind walls of secrecy, Shah lives a full life

By LEONARD GREENWOOD
Los Angeles Times

CUERNAVACA, Mexico — Approaching the villa where the deposed Shah of Iran has lived since last June, a visitor is struck by the apparent absence of guards. If there are armed men around, they are well concealed.

But the house has been chosen carefully. It stands at the edge of a steep canyon and the only access is from the front. The approach is along a narrow, 200-yard alley.

When a bell is rung at the gate, an aide responds. On this occasion the aide is Mark Morse, an American, and he concedes that security has been a constant concern.

Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi and his staff have heard repeatedly of plots to assassinate not only the shah but members of his family.

Three months ago, a revolutionary court in Iran tried members of the royal family in absentia and condemned them to die. The court's leader, the Ayatollah Sedegh Khalkhali, said at the time that he had sent three gunmen to Mexico to carry out the executions. He said later that he had put a price of more than $140,000 on the shah's head.

Morse indicated that the Mexican authorities were capable of meeting the challenge.

"We feel we have a very good security system provided by the Mexican government," Morse said. "You have to remember that the shah has lived all his life with security guards and he is comfortable with them."

"He is particularly comfortable with the sophistication of the Mexican security specialists assigned to guard him and his family."

The shah and his family were forced to leave revolt-torn Iran in January. After brief stops in Egypt, Morocco and the Bahamas, they settled in here on June 10.

Cuernavaca, about 60 miles southwest of Mexico City, is known for its mild climate. Many artists, writers and film personalities live here in modern houses behind high walls. The villa occupied by the shah is a three-storey mansion on the southern outskirts of the city, in a district known as Palmas. It is owned by the widow of a Mexican architect.

Aides will not say how many members of the shah's family live with him, nor will they answer questions on the whereabouts of any members of the family not living here. Even the size of the shah's household staff is kept secret.

Since arriving in Cuernavaca, the shah has led a quiet life, his aides say. He plays golf and tennis, but they will not say where he plays, how often or with whom.

The villa has a swimming pool, but Morse refused to say how often the shah or his family swim in it. He does keep fit, however.

"He's in great shape, fit and strong," Morse said. "It is incredible, considering what he has been through."

Much of the time the shah spends writing a book, which is expected to be completed early in 1980. His staff will not say who the publisher will be, but it is believed to be a European publishing house.

During the three months the shah and his family have been in Cuernavaca, they have received a number of visitors, including former President Richard M. Nixon and former Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger. There have been several parties.

Members of the shah's staff say he has a healthy appetite, and that he has occasionally dined on Mexican food but prefers French cuisine.

He has taken two short trips, one to the town of Puebla, about 60 miles from Cuernavaca, and the other to the state of Oaxaca. He hopes to travel more around the Mexican countryside, Morse said, but, for security reasons, offered no details.

The shah "finds the people warm and friendly, and they have been decent to him," Morse said.

Asked if the shah planned to stay in this country, Morse replied, "He would not presume to say he wants to stay indefinitely. That is not up to him. It is the prerogative of the Mexican government to indicate how long he might remain."

But the shah is not known to have made any investments that might indicate a desire to stay indefinitely.

Energy common market pleas remind Canada of Tricky Dicky

NEW YORK (CP) — Mitchell Sharp says the U.S. should drop any ideas it might have about a North American energy common market.

"It's a non-starter with the Canadian people," Sharp told an energy symposium sponsored by the Conference Board.

As commissioner of the Northern Pipeline Agency, Sharp was in New York on Thursday to give a briefing on the status of the proposed 8,800 kilometre Alaska Highway gas pipeline project.

It would bring Alaskan natural gas from Prudhoe Bay and from the Mackenzie Delta in the Northwest Territories to southern markets in both countries.

The building of this system, the largest private civil project ever undertaken, was to begin with construction beginning on the Alaskan portion as early as next January and ready to go into operation by January, 1983. But the beginning of operations has been set back to November, 1984, a delay of nearly two years.

In September, 1977, Canada and the United States agreed to build the pipeline but a series of obstacles including U.S. bureaucratic red tape held up its construction and raised costs from the original estimate of $10 million. Private financing still has to be completed particularly for the Alaskan section.

Sharp said in an interview that suggestions of a joint continental energy policy upset Canadians who remember the Richard Nixon years in the White House.

"It produces an adverse comment right away," Sharp said.

"That's why I think it's far better for Americans to talk about co-operation on particular things and then Canadians could sit down and talk about them.

"If you say, 'we'd like to have a common market,' Canadians say, 'What does that mean?'

" 'You mean you would have access to all of our energy and we would not have the right to withhold it for ourselves? To hell with that!' "

Sharp said he remembers well the time he was external affairs minister in the early 1970s when Nixon imposed import quotas on Canadian crude oil, reducing the daily export to slightly more than 300,000 barrels from 600,000.

Nixon apparently was trying to protect the U.S. domestic crude oil industry from much cheaper Middle East oil that was beginning to flood the U.S. markets.

The higher prices for domestic crude cost U.S. consumers an estimated $5 billion extra a year they would have saved if import controls were not in effect.

Sharp recalled that Canada had great difficulty in maintaining an open border for what "we thought was unlimited supplies of petroleum."

There was pressure at the time in Canada for a common energy market because some Canadians thought they could get in under the umbrella of American policy, Sharp said.

J. J. Greene was Canada's energy minister at the time and he was involved in sharp exchanges with the Nixon administration.

He asserted that Canadians never would negotiate anything "with a gun at the head."

During the controversy, a Nixon assistant admitted the administration was trying to force Canada to join a continental energy agreement, claiming that national security of the U.S. required such an agreement to ensure the source of supply.

Now the situation has been reversed.

With the U.S. relatively short of energy, some leading Americans have raised the possibilities of tapping Canadian energy and setting up a common market to ensure easy access to Canadian supplies.

Sharp said Canadians still would prefer to deal with issues one by one.

"Otherwise, the impression is created that the purpose would be to reduce the power that Canadians have to look after their own needs and purposes just as the United States would want to retain that right."

PLO ceasefire 'for Jackson'

BEIRUT (AP) — In a goodwill gesture to Rev. Jesse Jackson, the Palestine Liberation Organization has declared a unilateral ceasefire in southern Lebanon.

However, it is not known if the truce will halt cross-border raids on Israel or terror bombings inside the Jewish state.

PLO spokesman Mahmoud Labady announced the truce Thursday night only hours after the American black leader met with PLO chief Yasser Arafat. It was their third meeting since Jackson and his 17-member delegation began touring Mideast capitals last month.

The meeting took place shortly after Jackson was released from a Beirut hospital for treatment of a stomach ailment. He leaves for home later today.

Labady said the PLO ceasefire is different from an existing UN-mediated truce in southern Lebanon because it is being declared by the Palestinians alone.

Asked how the this differs from the UN ceasefire, Labady replied: "We will respect it more."

Labady declared earlier: "The PLO pledges to cease fire in southern Lebanon due to its deep concern for the security, the stability, safety and integrity of Lebanon."

Jackson said the PLO ceasefire declaration is a "start." He called on Congress to restrain Israeli operations in southern Lebanon by enforcing restrictions on the use of U.S.-supplied arms for "aggressive purposes."

Quints: Baker's dozen

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — A 35-year-old mother of eight, who makes 60 cents a day as a maid, has given birth to healthy quintuplets, doctors say.

The babies, all girls, were born Thursday to Evelina Torres in the town of Neiva, a state capital about 280 kilometres southwest of Bogota. They weighed an average three pounds, five ounces each.

The five girls are in a single incubator. The wife of President Julio Cesar Turbay said she is arranging to have four incubators sent to the town so each baby would have its own.

The father is a cowboy who earns $2 a day.

Stanfield, Sarkis huddle

BEIRUT (Reuter) — Special Canadian envoy Robert Stanfield today discussed troubled southern Lebanon and the Arab-Israeli conflict with Lebanese President Elias Sarkis, officials said.

Stanfield arrived in Beirut Thursday as part of a tour of Middle East countries to sound out their views on Canada's Mideast policy.

Hotel guests flee

BOSTON (AP) — A fire on a floor of conference rooms sent smoke billowing through the Park Plaza Hotel this morning and forced 1,500 guests out into fog-shrouded Park Square in night clothes, authorities said.

Police said the fire had been set and that a man had been arrested in the hotel lobby on arson charges. They said Thomas Moran, 31, of Boston would be arraigned later in the day.

At least three people were taken to hospital with smoke inhalation, authorities said.

Hotel owner Donald Saunders said the fire was limited to the fourth floor, which contains conference rooms, but that smoke had caused damage throughout the 14-storey hotel.

May just tear-it-up warning by Mugabe

By JAY ROSS
Washington Post

LONDON — Guerrilla leader Robert Mugabe warned Thursday that British tactics in the Rhodesia settlement conference could lead to his Patriotic Front alliance accepting a proposed constitution only to "tear it up" after gaining power.

The front wants to deal with the British-proposed constitution it opposes "in an honest manner," Mugabe said in an interview, but found it difficult because of Britain's insistence on certain safeguards for the 230,000 white-minority population.

He objected to British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington's efforts to force both the guerrillas and the Zimbabwe Rhodesian government, locked in a bloody war, to accept the draft constitution by Monday or risk breakdown of the four-week-old conference.

Acknowledging that Lord Carrington is trying to pressure the front into acceptance, Mugabe said: "We are not going to be threatened into a yes or no deal. We've come here to negotiate and negotiate we shall."

"We are not threatening anyone," he added. "We want the conference to continue."

Bennett's coal pitch stoked

TOKYO (AP) — British Columbia will take a more aggressive attitude toward exports to Japan, and hopes to double its sales of coking coal to the Japanese within the next few years, Premier Bill Bennett said Friday.

Bennett said coking coal from B.C. and Alberta was Canada's most important export to Japan last year, accounting for $560 million.

However, he said improvements are being made to the province's rail and harbor facilities that would permit B.C. to export between 12 and 15 million tons a year to Japan.

Family sees 'capping

TURIN, Italy (UPI) — Urban guerrillas of the Red Brigades ended an 80-day lull in their activities by "kneecapping" a Fiat automobile executive as his wife and infant child watched.

Police said three masked gunmen toting automatic pistols equipped with silencers Thursday shot Cesare Varetto five times in the kneecaps, calves and feet while he stood in his wife's clothing store.

Varetto, 36, was reported in satisfactory condition. His wife was treated for shock and released.

Prof's lab labelled drug factory

NEW YORK (AP) — The internationally known head of New York University's anthropology department was indicted Thursday, accused of turning his campus laboratory into a drug factory. His students were said to have been recruited to help him.

Prof. John Buettner-Janusch, 54, was accused of ordering chemicals to manufacture the dope through his office, with the university paying for them. Money realized from the sale of the drugs, the government said, was laundered though Simian Expansions, Inc., a company the professor established.

Buettner-Janusch pleaded not guilty Thursday before Judge Charles Tenney, who ordered the professor to give up his passport and post a $50,000 personal bond.

A native of Chicago, Buettner-Janusch holds doctorates from the universities of Chicago and Michigan. He successively held positions at the universities of Utah, Wayne, Michigan, Yale and Duke before coming to NYU in 1973 to head the anthropology department.

An authority on human and non-human primate evolution, Buettner-Janusch is associate editor of the American Journal of Physical Anthropology.

According to the federal indictment, the professor on one occasion combined the drug lidocaine and a barbiturate to be sold to purchasers "as a chemically pure form of synthesized cocaine."

He also was charged with the manufacture and possession of 2.2 pounds of a depressant commonly marketed under the name Quaalude, and the hallucinogen LSD.

The students whom the government said Buetter-Janusch assigned to aid in the manufacture of the drugs were not named in the indictment.

The indictment claimed that on one occasion Buettner-Janusch directed a confederate to take a tranquilizer in an effort to thwart a lie detector test.

Senate backs powerful energy agency

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Senate, handing President Carter a major victory on energy policy, voted Thursday to create a powerful new agency with broad powers to speed U.S. energy development.

Approved by a 68-25 vote was legislation that would set up a four-member Energy Mobilization Board that is intended to cut red tape blocking construction of oil refineries, pipelines, multi-billion-dollar synthetic fuel plants and other facilities.

Carter proposed a series of new energy measures in a speech July 15. The board is the first of his proposals to have reached the Senate floor.

The president's supporters said a board with unprecedented powers is needed if the U.S. is to develop new energy sources and reduce its dependence on foreign oil.

Environmentalists and states' rights advocates said the board would interfere with the rights of affected communities to decide if dirty or dangerous energy plants should be built in their neighborhoods.

A battle over what powers should be given the board is expected in the House of Representatives.

The mobilization board would have authority to designate an unlimited number of energy projects for so-called "fast track" treatment.

If a local or state agency failed to meet a deadline for approval or disapproval of a controversial local project, the board would step in and take over.

Stronger proposals giving the board authority to set aside federal, state or local laws that obstruct energy projects were defeated, along with environmentalists' efforts to weaken the version supported by Carter.

Latest gin: Schweppes and cockpits risky mix

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — While drinking and flying airplanes are not particularly compatible, the U.S. Navy says the combination is especially dangerous if the drink is a gin and tonic — mainly because of the tonic.

A navy doctor says there is evidence the quinine in tonic water can upset equilibrium and produce night blindness, blurred vision, double vision and abnormal color vision.

Capt. M. J. Dunne, stationed with the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology in Norfolk, said there are clear indications that even low doses of quinine can impair equilibrium and interfere with vision — effects that might be disastrous for jet pilots who suffer disorientation in flight anyway.

Dunne said the suspected quinine effects are not as dangerous for people on the ground.

"People on the ground aren't doing right banks or making deep dives," he said. "They generally keep their heads in one position and don't stimulate their equilibrium systems like pilots do."

The Naval Safety Centre in Norfolk has issued an alert that suggests pilots refrain from tonic drinks before flying while more studies are conducted over the next six months.

The U.S. Army, however, has gone further. It insists army pilots who have taken quinine beverages as frequently as every other day be grounded for 72 hours before they fly again.

Carter hoopla starts Dec. 4

By TERENCE SMITH
New York Times

WASHINGTON — President Carter intends to announce his candidacy for a second term on Dec. 4 and set off the next morning on a four-day, nationwide fund-raising tour that is expected to raise some $2 million, campaign officials said Thursday.

After attending a $1,000-per-couple "announcement dinner" in Washington the night of Dec. 4, Carter will fly to New York, Chicago, Atlanta and Los Angeles to lay out his goals for a second term at dinners in each of those cities. Simultaneously, Vice President Walter Mondale and First Lady Rosalynn Carter will embark on similar tours of their own.

To maximize the impact of the president's announcement, the Carter-Mondale Committee is negotiating with the networks to purchase 30 minutes of national television time. All three networks rejected the committee's initial request last month, as well as a similar appeal from Ronald Reagan, arguing that they did not wish to sell time to political candidates before 1980.

Campaign officials said Thursday, however, that Gerald Rafshoon, the president's former media adviser who is handling advertising for the campaign, would continue to press the networks for the time.

Pope hardlines birth control

Times News Services

CHICAGO — Pope John Paul II lashed out at liberal trends among U.S. Roman Catholics today, reaffirming the church's condemnation of birth control, abortion, adultery and homosexuality.

The pontiff's hard-line stand on issues that have been splitting the American church for decades came in an unprecedented special session of the U.S. Bishops Conference and dispelled speculation that John Paul would tone down his conservative message before liberal Catholics in the United States.

The ban on contraception has been a point of growing dissent ever since it was reasserted in the late Pope Paul VI's 1968 encyclical. Surveys indicate about 80 per cent of North American Catholics ignore it.

In a wide-ranging speech dealing with the whole spectrum of church attitudes toward sexuality, John Paul reaffirmed that sex outside marriage is sinful:

"In portraying the sexual union between husband and wife as a special expression of their covenanted love you rightly stated that sexual intercourse is a moral and human good only within marriage; outside marriage it is wrong."

In his most explicit reference to the subject since being elected to the papacy, John Paul also said: "Homosexual activity, as distinguished from homosexual orientation, is morally wrong."

He condemned, too, the growing acceptance of abortion in the United States, and lumped euthanasia, or mercy killing, in the same category:

"Just as you defended the unborn in the truth of their being, so also you clearly spoke up for the aged, asserting 'euthanasia or mercy killing is a grave moral evil. Such evil is incompatible with respect for human dignity and reverence for life.' "

U.S. priests travelling with the pope said his speech before the bishops conference

Direct-buying by stores riles marketing group

OLIVER (CP) — The Okanagan's $40-million-a-year fruit industry is angry over a move by the Kelly Douglas-Super-Valu organization to buy apples directly from two Oliver orchards, bypassing the grower-owned B.C. Tree Fruits Ltd. marketing firm.

The apples have been sold as orchard run, unwashed and unwaxed and Super-Valu has sold them for as low as 29 cents a pound compared with Tree Fruits apples at 49 cents a pound sold by competitors.

The industry sees the Kelly Douglas move as the first major threat to the marketing network and fears other growers will return to direct-selling methods.

The wholesale-retail firms, both part of the giant Weston food empire, have bought an estimated 700,000 pounds of apples from the independents and the apples now are on sale in Vancouver.

From 1939 until about five years ago it was compulsory for all growers in the Okanagan to sell fresh fruit through B.C. Tree Fruits Ltd., a marketing agency set up under provincial legislation to put a halt to retailers pitting grower against grower.

The compulsory aspect was eliminated by the NDP when it introduced farm income assurance. Growers can make direct sales to stores but if caught can be struck from the ranks of the 2,200-member B.C. Fruit-Growers Association and not be eligible for assurance benefits.

The Oliver growers are Graem Nelson and Ronald Fournier, both with 6.5-hectare orchards.

They formed a company called Black Sage Orchards which bought apples from about 75 growers in the Okanagan — some of them coming from executive members of the growers' association and a few board members from packing houses.

"We have shipped more than three-quarters of a million pounds of apples to Kelly Douglas as well as about 36 truckloads of apples outside of B.C. this year," Fournier said.

An official of B.C. Tree Fruits said Thursday that the value of the apples is more than $300,000.

"Really, it is an in-house industry problem and one that we just can't seem to overcome. We have been unable to convince the few independents that the structure is the best for everyone and if we go back to the pre-war days it would be havoc for all growers."

George Fraser of Osoyoos, president of the growers' association, said the present industry makeup ensures price stability but is providing an umbrella for the independents.

"We have asked the packing houses to cancel contracts with these people and are still waiting for their decision," he said.

Boat people scuttle Viet envoy's speech

OTTAWA (CP) — Ambassador Tran Tuan Anh of Vietnam cancelled a speaking engagement at the University of Ottawa Thursday and took refuge in a dean's office after an angry mob, identified by police as boat people, started an argument with him.

A university spokesman said that when Anh discovered many in the audiece were wearing arm bands bearing the flag of the defeated regime of South Vietnam, he refused to speak. He was to talk about Vietnamese-Canadian relations.

City police said that when they arrived "the crowd was waiting to beat up the ambassador. They had to be forcibly held back."

Political science professor Douglas Maggoch said university security officials called police when they felt the situation "was becoming potentially violent."

Campus security guards had cleared the lecture room but the crowd milled about outside the dean's office.

A university spokesman quoted Anh as saying "he felt the demonstration was a repudiation of the sovereignty of Vietnam and a provocation to him."

An embassy spokesman said trouble was caused by Vietnamese people who didn't go to the university to listen to the ambassador.

City police said Anh was not hurt but was extremely frightened. RCMP watched Anh's residence during the night.

Anh has been ambassador to Canada since July 25, 1977.

Marguerite to be scrapped

Transportation Minister Alex Fraser said today the province is shopping in Europe for a new ship to replace the Princess Marguerite.

He said the government will keep the Victoria-Seattle tourist ferry service as well as service to northern communities, including the Queen Charlottes.

But he indicated the venerable Marguerite will be scrapped as being too expensive to refit to meet shipping and environmental standards.

Fraser said B.C. Ferries Corp. operations chief George Baldwin, in Europe on vacation, is keeping his eyes open for a replacement vessel for either the Marguerite or the the Queen of Prince Rupert which now serves the north and may be transferred to the Victoria-Seattle service.

But the minister said it is difficult to find vessels for coastal service which have adequate capacity and are no more than about eight years old.

Meanwhile the government has pledged that the Queen of Surrey will be adapted to northern run standards and tenders for the work have been returned, although no contract has been let.

Goggled rapist throws fear into UVic campus

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Posters warning women students at the University of Victoria about a rapist have gone up on buildings across the campus.

Women going out at night are being urged to travel only in groups and to report any strange incidents.

The posters urge the female students not to go out at nights unless they are accompanied and, where possible, to notify the UVic security services first of their movements.

Department head chairmen have been asked to make arrangements to escort female staff members to their cars if they work late at night.

And some professors have been issuing warnings to their classes about the rapist.

The measures result from reports released simultaneously by Oak Bay and Saanich police Wednesday of an attempted rape on Sept. 19 and a rape Tuesday night.

The suspect is described as a youth in his early 20s, medium build, and clean shaven. On both occasions he wore ski goggles.

Notices posted around the campus suggest there may have been two other attempts and the student paper Martlett said today a person of similar description to the rapist was spotted peeping into the women's shower room at the McKinnon gym Tuesday.

Police are puzzled by the notices which say there have been two other attempted rapes.

But there may be an explanations for the discrepancy.

Win Whale of the public relations office said it is his understanding the notices were posted by the Victoria Rape Relief Centre.

The centre assumes that for every rape reported there is one that is not, and this would account for the doubling of incidents.

David Clode, general manager of the Alma Mater Society said concern is beginning to escalate on campus.

"Everyone is getting on the bandwagon. The problem is no one is sure what is the best appoach to adopt in catching this character."

Mike Elcock, manager of athletics and recreational services said today he is now in the process of organizing female joggers into groups.

Elcock said he is upset police delayed so long in making the first incident public.

"I am appalled," he said. "It seems the police were using the campus female population as guinea pigs in order to catch the guy."

Although a artist's sketch of the rapist has been widely publicized, police are still without a suspect.

Saanich Det. Sgt. Don Russell said there are certain features in common in the two reported cases.

In each the victim was petite and has long, light-colored hair. They both drive small, four-door cars with reclining seats.

In both attacks, the women were getting into their cars when the rapist approached.

He got into the back seat and holding a hunting knife to their throats, ordered them to drive to a secluded location.

In the first incident the woman managed to escape and ran naked to a nearby house to get help.

He urged women to park their cars in well-lit areas and to check to make certain no one is hiding in the back seat when they get in. Once inside, the car doors should immediately be locked.

.05 drunk law urged

The provincial Motor Vehicle Task Force wants police to have the power to hand out 24-hour suspensions to anyone who blows more than .05 on breathalyzer tests.

The present level at which a driver is charged with impaired driving is .08.

Assistant Attorney-General Neil McDiarmid, who heads the eight-man task force, told a CounterAttack luncheon Thursday his committee wants harsher treatment of drivers who ignore driving suspensions.

McDiarmid said the medical profession claims that anyone's judgment is impaired at the .05 level.

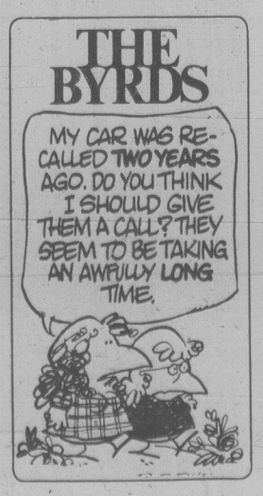
McDiarmid acknowledged that policeman already have the authority to hand out 24-hour roadside suspensions if they think a suspect is too impaired to drive, but not enough to blow .08.

For suspended drivers caught driving, McDiarmid's committee had recommended imprisonment and stiffer fines. He now feels the impounding of vehicles might be necessary to deter such violators.

Throughout his speech, McDiarmid referred to the public's attitude on drinking drivers. The public still jokes about drunk drivers, but McDiarmid doesn't see anything humorous about drivers who kill, maim and destroy property.

One of the reasons the courts are clogged is that 40 per cent of the cases involve drinking drivers. Drinking drivers cost the province $112 million in 1978.

A successful project in Vernon, which the province believes saved $40,000 in court and police overtime costs, involved videotaping drunk drivers after they were arrested. It is considered the best device for getting drunk driving convictions.



Gold prices like yo-yo

LONDON (UPI) — After another steep plunge at the opening, gold prices recovered today to reach $385 at the afternoon fixing on the London bullion market — almost $60 an ounce below Tuesday's record.

But their were wide variations on world markets.

The price of gold had dropped steadily most of the week as rumors about gold sales and support plans for the U.S. dollar floated out of the International Monetary Eund-World Bank conference in Belgrade.

Thaw on land freeze assailed as hypocritical

Times News Services

VANCOUVER — The B.C. Federation of Agriculture has branded as hypocritical a provincial cabinet committee decision to remove 626 acres of land in Langley from the agricultural land reserve, while the B.C. Land Commission says the move will make administering its own act more difficult.

Pat Hibbert, B.C. Federation president, said in an interview in Vernon that the decision is a continuation of government hypocrisy.

He said the government simultaneously is doing its best to destroy agricultural land while trying to attract other industry to the province.

"I am beginning to despair that anyone in any level of government in this province is really serious about saving agricultural land.

"We are getting all sorts of pious statements from the premier on down about how they believe in this principle — but actions speak louder than words."

Land commission spokesman Axel Kinnear said it is "very concerned because we turned down the application twice and now the cabinet has approved it."

"It does put us in the position of having it kind of difficult administering the Land Commission Act."

Kinnear, along with a number of other critics of the cabinet decision, said he was also worried that it may open to the door to a rash of applications for removal of similar land from the reserve.

The cabinet's environment and land use committee announced Wednesday it was allowing an appeal by Gloucesters Properties Ltd., a Chilean company, to remove the land from the reserve for an industrial park.

A 1977 change in the land commission act allows appeals to be made directly to the environment minister after they have been rejected by the commission. The minister then decides if the appeal can go to the environment and land use committee.

"This was quite a significant decision, but I'm sure the government quite realizes that and they took it into consideration," Kinnear said.

But he said he was worried about the Langley decision because the land is in an agricultural area and "we wouldn't like to see it setting a precedent for other parcels of land."

"We are concerned that there will be a rash of appeals to get class four and five land out of the agricultural reserve. This could be opening the door."

Environment Minister Rafe Mair said Thursday he knew nothing about the application to exempt the land from the reserve, although he signed the order to release it as he signs all orders.

Health Minister Bob McClelland, MLA for the area, said the cabinet decision does not mean any lack of faith in the land commission.

He said the commission has to operate under narrow criteria in making their decisions; the cabinet committee has broader terms of reference and can consider the land's history, economics and its possible future use. However, he declined to disclose why the appeal was allowed, saying cabinet decisions are secret.

CLiff Stainsby, executive director of the Scientific Pollution and Environmental Control society, said land commission members should resign because of lack of support from the provincial government.

"They're basically telling their land commission that they're incompetent," he said.

Harry de Jong, chairman of the Central Fraser Valley regional district which has jurisdiction over the development, accused the cabinet committee of playing politics.

"I believe it was a purely political decision not based on land classifications, which should be the first consideration," he said.

"If we're going to have a land reserve, let's reserve some land."

He said the development will mean windfall profits of $30 million for Gloucester.

Ainslie Loretto, a company director, labelled the accusation as garbage, but would not come up with an alternative figure. She said the company will spend $42 million servicing the property and expects to make a fair profit.

Mayor George Driediger of Langley township said the development will benefit the municipality by providing a strong industrial base.

THE OUTCASTS

Juvenile jury joins judgments

BRANDON (CP) — Juvenile offenders will face the scrutiny of their peers as well as a judge under an experimental courtroom program to be launched here this fall.

Under the experiment, six juveniles are to sit alongside family court judge Brian Giesbrecht in cases involving non-violent incidents. Giesbrecht will continue to decide whether a delinquency has actually been committed.

The role of the 'juvenile jury' will be limited to suggesting appropriate penalties. Giesbrecht says he won't be obliged to accept the recommendations of the juveniles, but he expects their advice will be helpful.

"The main goal is to involve the community in the family court system," he says, adding the jurors will probably learn as much from the court experience as the youngsters who are brought before him.

Attorney-General Gerry Mercier says the project is designed to make the sentencing of delinquents more meaningful.

"Sentencing by one's peers may have more impact," he says.

If the juvenile jurors follow a pattern established in Denver, Colo., where student juries have handed out sentences to about 300 juveniles since the program began six months ago, offenders shouldn't expect light treatment from their peers.

Charlene Shaffer, a counsellor in the Denver program, says juvenile jurors often are harder on their peers than family court officials, for everything from car theft to assault.

Zora Lee Stienberg, the program's director, says the jurors come from different economic and racial groups, and a number of them have probably experimented with marijuana.

"Yet they really seem offended at the ones who are selling the drug," Mrs. Stienberg said. "They ask these kids 'how would you feel if someone was selling drugs to your little sister?'"

Sooke house fire blamed on furnace

A faulty propane furnace is believed the cause of a fire which gutted the interior of a house at 6734 Grant Road in Sooke early today.

Sooke RCMP estimated at least $5,000 damage was done in the blaze reported by a neighbor at 2:35 a.m.

Occupant Wendy Cucuheran was not at home at the time.

ZOLTAN KASZAS
. . . missing three weeks

Police appeal for help

City police have appealed to the public for help in locating a 51-year-old Victoria man missing for three weeks.

Zoltan (Steve) Kaszas was last seen at 7:30 a.m. Sept. 17 outside his apartment at 707 Esquimalt Road.

Kaszas didn't show up for work that morning at the University of Victoria where he is employed as a gardener.

Three days later UVic security manager Tom O'Conner reported him missing to police.

Kaszas is described as five feet 10 inches tall, 170 pounds, with brown hair.

Anyone who may have seen him is asked to contact Detective Insp. Angus Stewart at 384-4111.

Herpes treatment developed

SASKATOON (CP) — Researchers at the University of Saskatchewan have developed a drug to treat herpes virus, which in its extreme form is one type of venereal disease, a university news release said Thursday.

The new drug has been proven effective in tissue cultures and lab animals, where it has been found to be potent but non-toxic, the release said. It has been tested in Switzerland, the United States and England but further studies must be undertaken before the drug can be considered for human use.

U.S. price rise tops in 5 years

WASHINGTON (LAT) — U.S. wholesale prices, spurred by sharp increases for fuel and food, rose by 1.4 percent in September for the biggest monthly advance in almost five years.

The latest steep rise in the Department of Labor Producer Price Index signalled higher prices for consumers this fall and dashed President Carter's hopes for a slowdown in the 12 percent inflation rate in the closing months of 1979.

The index of prices paid to producers of basic goods has climbed by 11.8 percent over the past year and rose at a 15.7 percent rate in the last three months, the Department of Labor said.

The labor department also announced the unemployment rate dropped 5.8 per cent from six per cent in September.

Saudis to reduce oil flow Jan. 1

NEW YORK (AP) — Saudi Arabia's foreign minister says the world's largest oil exporter plans to reduce its production Jan. 1. The move could put further upward pressure on world oil prices.

Prince Saud said the Saudis' previously announced decision to continue producing 9.5 million barrels a day through the end of the year was only temporary.

"Beyond Jan. 1, there is no plan to do that," he said in an interview with the Wall Street Journal, published today. He said the Saudis plan to reduce production to 8.5 million barrels a day.

Saudi Arabia boosted production by one million barrels a day earlier this year as gasoline lines plagued parts of the United States. The move was seen as an effort to stabilize oil prices and supplies.

The Saudis extended that temporary increase to the end of 1979, but had not said what they would do beyond that.

"We hoped this expansion period would serve as a transition period for the consuming countries to act," he said.

The statement comes as Libya and Algeria, two other members of the Organization or Petroleum Exporting Countries, have taken steps to divert some oil away from large oil companies and into the spot market, where prices now are substantially above the prices charged by OPEC.

And in Mexico, the state-owned oil monopoly has announced it will raise the price of its crude oil next week but will not say by how much.

Banks' BCRIC sales policies criticized

The Pacific district council of the Investment Dealers Association of Canada has submitted a report to the inspector general of banks about a range of practices employed by some B.C. chartered banks in the distribution of B.C. Resources Investment Corp. shares.

The report was written in co-operation with the Vancouver Stock Exchange.

Spokesmen for the IDA and the stock exchange refused to comment on the contents of the report until officials in charge of the Bank Act have had an opportunity to review the report.

At the height of the share distribution scheme, investment dealers said some banks had over-aggressive lending policies and loans managers with little knowledge of the stock market were giving clients advice on securities investment.

Some banks were also criticized for abandoning their usual rule of not lending at a margin level higher than the securities industry and, at times, lending as much as 100 per cent of the purchase price of the BCRIC shares.

Banks, trust companies, securities dealers and other financial institutions received 25 cents a share for the distribution of the five free BCRIC shares and sale of additional shares.

was one of the most comprehensive explanations of traditional church attitudes on sexuality they had ever heard. They said it left little room for manoeuvre to church liberals who had been seeking more flexible guidelines, especially concerning birth control.

He told his audience of about 300 bishops — the top level of the U.S. Catholic hierarchy — they must be "absolutely faithful" to all traditional church teachings. But he also realized his orthodoxy would be unpopular among some of America's 50 million Catholics, adding: "It is not possible for us to avoid all criticism; nor is it possible to please everyone." But, he explained, church traditions represent "the word of God in its purity and integrity."

John Paul's long-awaited speech to the American bishops — the ecclesiastical equivalent of his human-rights address to the United Nations on Tuesday — was direct and firm.

It followed a joyful mass he celebrated today with Chicago's Polish community — second in numbers in the world only to Warsaw — at Five Holy Martyrs Church, named for the first five Catholic saints from Poland.

Meanwhile, many priests, nuns and lay people have reacted swiftly — and strongly — to Thursday's firm stand by the Pope against the ordination of women as Roman Catholic priests.

"Needless to say, I disagree with him," said Maureen Reiff, a board member of Chicago Catholic Women, a feminist group. "We are all called by our baptism to the priesthood — men and women alike."

TOWN TALK

That fat harvest moon rising in the east these days is not really that big. It's common knowledge that it's an optical illusion, but someone's finally come up with a way to prove it.

Vancouver planetarium director Dave Rodger says the moon appears bigger close to the horizon because the human eye sees it among houses and trees — not because of any supposed magnifying effect of the atmosphere.

You can demonstrate the theory by looking at the moon upside down through your legs. It sounds ridiculous but it works. Your eyes have no familiar reference points to gauge its size and the moon actually "shrinks."

So take a moon at the moon tonight.

People with power saws are cutting up logs on Shoal Bay to lay in a winter fuel supply and in the process driving some residents mad with the noise and smell.

"We've had these awful power saws going hours and hours," moans Mrs. Andrew McGregor of 456 Beach.

"I don't care a blow about how much wood they take, it's the noise factor we have to put up with. One man was down there at 9 o'clock on a Sunday morning."

One recent afternoon an amateur woodcutter was at it for 3½ hours straight, she said.

She said she's complained to Oak Bay Mayor Brian Smith but nothing's been done and police will only act to stop such disturbances on a Sunday or a holiday.

"There should be cutting at certain hours on certain days. Damn it all, there is a limit to noise pollution," she says.

There are only 81 drinking days until Christmas.

And for perhaps five of those days, CounterAttack will blitz the Greater Victoria area, going so far as to bring in a second BATmobile.

The blitz warning was delivered Thursday at a CounterAttack luncheon at the Red Lion Inn.

Why take a chance? Take a cab. If you drink, think — as CounterAttack keeps telling us.

Capital Region District representative Al Beasley regaled the View Royal Ratepayers Association this week with the latest hot news about sewers.

At one point, he said he had invited Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier out to see View Royal's problem areas.

"But he never showed," Beasley said.

He then pointed out that there was a pocket of Saanich residents just off the Trans-Canada Highway near Helmcken Road that Saanich was going to have difficulty servicing.

"So we're going to run them through our own sewers," Beasley said. "We're going to be good neighbors whether they like it or not."

Evicted . . . and no appeal

By PAUL MINVIELLE

The whole procedure has been very proper, very legal, very civilized.

The result for 22 mobile home and trailer owners at Centennial Trailer Park at 1455 Craigflower has been very, very traumatic.

All were told to get out. And even though they heard the same thing almost three years ago, nobody believed it would happen. But it is happening, and the residents are apparently helpless.

The tenants of the park, which is on the Songhees Indian Reserve, were issued eviction notices (called "termination notices to tenants") June 28, giving them until Oct. 31 to clear out.

The notices were sent by Litwin Construction Ltd., 204-151 Cedar Hill Crossroad, whose president, Mike Litwin Sr., lives at 4700 Deerwood Terrace in Broadmead. Litwin wants to build townhouses on the land, which is leased from band chief John Albany.

A subsequent appeal to the Rentalsman was based on the charge that the notices were improperly delivered, a feeble legal shot at a loophole that wasn't there.

And now Sheila Wood, on Lot 8 in the park, doesn't know what to do.

Until April, she lived in a small travel trailer, which she sold. Then she got into her present mobile home.

The trailer is spotless, and Wood proudly shows the new carpet, the recently refinished kitchen cupboards, the freshly painted bedroom.

At first she leased with an option to buy. In April, when the owner pressured her, she decided to take the plunge and buy. Two months later, she got the eviction notice.

The problem for her and 20 others in the park, is that there is nowhere to go. One tenant had his unit hauled to a Malahat trailer court, but hauling costs $700 or $800. In many cases, Centennial residents can't afford it. In some cases, the mobile homes are too old to make the trip.

"Where can we go?" asked Wood. "We tried several things, but nothing works."

Wood and several other tenants confirmed that "vultures" had made an appearance — would-be buyers who know the owners' plight and hope to snap up $15,000 mobiles for as little as $2,000.

Bev and Ted Sanderson bought their unit two years ago from Friendly Mobile Homes.

"They pooh-poohed the idea that anyone would want to build here. It didn't make sense to put permanent structures on leased land, they told us," said Mrs. Sanderson.

"Frank Mitchell (Esquimalt-Port Renfrew NDP MLA) has been really helpful. But the time factor is really working against us now. And we're not getting any help from the government."

Provincial Secretary Hugh Curtis was apprised of the situation by Al Hunt, president of the Mobile Home Owners Association. Curtis wrote back to say the matter had been turned over to Housing Minister Jim Chabot.

The matter seems to have died there.

Wilfred Hobday is 76. He and his wife came from Tofino three years ago, looking forward to a quiet time, but Mrs. Hobday died soon after they moved in.

Hobday hoped somebody would resolve the situation, but that hope is fading.

"I have a buyer providing she or I can find somewhere to put the thing," Hobday said.

"I don't know who's at fault," he said, "or whether it's through a lack of our own endeavors."

"I don't know what to do. I guess I'll have to go and live with my daughter in Sooke. I don't see any way out of it."

Hobday had thought the co-op suggested by Mitchell would provide the answer, but the idea bogged down.

Mitchell said he had organized the residents into a co-op, but he couldn't explain why it had foundered.

The idea was for the 22 owners to band together and lease two acres nearby, still on reserve land.

At first, it was thought the new park would cost about $2,900 a pad, meaning a $100 a month rental.

But in giving his approval to the project, the Indian agent said the new park must meet regional district standards.

This boosted the cost of each pad to $4,500, which translated into a $135 a month rental.

For many residents, particularly the pensioners, it was just too much.

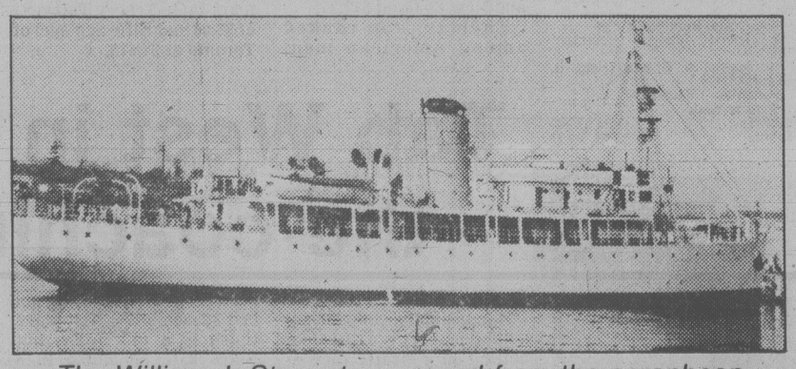
Said Mitchell: "This was going to be their last home. Some are still making payments on their trailers. The pad rental where they are is only $63 a month."

A Litwin Construction spokesman would say only that each resident would be paid $300 towards the cost of removing his or her unit.

Calls to government ministries this morning indicated that while there is vague awareness of the problem, nothing can be done.

Operators of new trailer and/or mobile home parks are often sales organizations which sell the homes that go into the park. They're not anxious to accommodate an influx of older units.

For Centennial Trailer Park, the end is Oct. 31. What happens to the tenants?



The William J. Stewart . . . saved from the scrapheap

Survey ship bought by Oak Bay Marina

Oak Bay Marina has rescued the mothballed survey steamship William J. Stewart from the shipbreakers.

General manager Wayne Wagner confirmed today the 47-year-old ship will be brought to the Inner Harbor within a month for restoration and adaptation of the former hydrographic vessel into a tourist-oriented role.

He said it had not been determined whether the Stewart will be fully restored to operate under her own power, or whether it will be moored, possibly as a museum or floating restaurant.

Wagner said Marina owner Bob Wright, travelling in Europe, had not been made aware of the marina's successful bid to Crown Assets Disposal Corp., and that more specific plans will be made for the ship on his return.

He would not disclose the price, but Crown Assets said it was between $100,000 and $150,000.

"We're very pleased we've got it because several of the bidders were scrap dealers. We're rather proud we've rescued it," Wagner said.

He promised the ship will be ready for the next tourist season.

Stewart will be towed from her berth at the Institute of Ocean Sciences at Patricia Bay where she has been for nearly three seasons, and docked at Capital Iron on Store Street where marine engineering consultant Case Laboratories will help develop her future role.

Wagner said the marina's bid was accompanied by a letter outlining the historic value of the ship and the proposed tourism role, which he thought influenced the federal decision to accept the bid.

Probe asked on Prospect Lake access cutoff

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Prospect Lake residents want a formal inquiry into Saanich's failure to protect public access to most of the east side of Prospect Lake.

Spokesman Ena Lang said Thursday Mayor Mel Couvelier will receive a letter today asking that land be expropriated for public access.

They say their is no public route down to the beach because Saanich planners didn't ask for it when four lakefront properties were subdivided, one of them this summer.

The properties seal off 4,500 feet of waterfront between the Prospect Lake golf course and Echo Drive.

When a waterfront property is subdivided Saanich is legally entitled to lake access every 660 feet.

The property owners avoided providing it by sucessfully appealing to the highways ministry.

Lang, a 14-year resident of 291 Stevens, said people are upset because they have been denied a public path to the lake from Stevens.

The spot is a favorite swimming area for youngsters, she said.

"There has been a great wrong done. It's very, very serious," she said.

"Future generations will never be able to see that side of Prospect Lake."

It has been learned that municipal surveyor Gordon Alston-Stewart in an inter-office letter dated April 19 questioned the planning policy.

"The east side of Prospect Lake is steep, but certainly in 4,500 feet of shoreline we could get some access or possibly a dedication for a public strip with water access," he said.

A popular route to the water is on land owned by Victoria lawyer Ronald Cook, who appealed the access provision and then subdivided a 33-acre parcel this summer into three lots.

Cook said Thursday he was surprised the residents are demanding access.

He said two of the lots have been sold and he plans to build a home on the third.

Planner Gil Laurenson told council a footpath wasn't required because of "steep topography and the rocky nature of the area."

But Mrs. Lang said she can't believe the explanation.

She said she and another woman over 60 walked down the property line and into the water without difficulty.

The Land Registry Act states where subdivided land borders a body of water access must be provided by public road.

In the past eight years four subdivision applicants appealed the access provision with no opposition from Saanich, Don South, highways ministry senior approving officer, told the Times.

But assistant Saanich planner Alan Hopper said Saanich did oppose at least one of the appeals.

Laurenson informed South last May that Saanich wouldn't oppose the access appeal by Cook's firm of Cook, Roberts and Whittaker.

South, who said he is too busy to investigate every case, said he he didn't realize the east side of Prospect Lake is now closed to the public.

And Laurenson recently informed council it is too late to provide the footpath now because the subdivision has been registered.

Lot size in that area is a minimum 10 acres. Nothing can be done to get public access until the minimum is lowered to five acres.

Mrs. Lang doesn't believe that will happen in the near future and in the meantime the public's enjoyment of the lake is limited.

She said she is upset a municipal planner would take action on such an important issue without consulting council first.

Ald. Mary Casilio, Saanich ombudsman, said she first heard of the situation in June through Mrs. Lang.

She said she was told by Laurenson municipal surveyors said the land was too steep for a footpath.

But Casilio said she walked the route and the bluff presented little trouble.

"It's just a dip that could be filled in," she said.

She said access should have been reserved by the municipality, regardless of the roughness of the terrain.

TV Mailbag

MICHENER BUFF — I was really bowled over by the production of "Centennial" that was on TV last year. In all, do you know how many of James Michener's books were made into movies? — Carl Friedkin, Perth Amboy, N.J.

This may not be a complete list, but I remember "Return to Paradise," "South Pacific", "The Bridge at Toko Ri", "Sayonara" and "Hawaii." Of course, there was also the TV series "Adventures in Paradise", which was only loosely based on anything resembling Michener's work.

STILL SMILING — I recently saw a TV movie called "The Paradise Connection," with Buddy Ebsen. There was a young man in it whom I liked very much. Can you tell me his name and when I can see him again soon? — Alison Ripley, Lakeland, Fla.

Just turn your channel from CBS to NBC and you'll see the young man in question. After doing "The Chisholms" and "The Paradise Connection" for CBS, Brian Kerwin landed steady job on NBC's "Sherrif Lobo".

FAT IS FUN — Can you help me out? I recall a TV series that was about two fat people who worked in a restaurant. What was it, if it existed at all? — Mrs. Nancy Irwin, Hartford, Conn.

It existed, but it only lasted two months. The show was "The Dumplings", starring James Coco and Geraldine Brooks as the portly pair running a New York lunch counter. NBC put it on as a mid-season replacement in 1976.

MARTIN LEWIS — Can you tell me when Jerry Lewis and Dean Martin split up their team? Also, is there a book that chronicles their years together? I love their movies. — Mrs. A. Walters, Atlanta, Ga.

The famed comedy team went their separate ways in 1956. For a look at their early career together read Arthur Marx's "Everybody Loves Somebody Sometimes". It was published in 1976.

This ? or This ?
Which homes sell the fastest and who really makes the buying decisions?

HOMES TODAY

Those houses in the lower half of the price range move the fastest, say most realtors. Homes that are next to schools, churches, or have unorthodox plans also take longer than usual to sell.

48 percent of homes listed with Victoria realtors sell within a 60 to 90 day period, which means we live in a "hot market area", though not quite as hot as Calgary, where 52 percent of listings sell within that time, or as Edmonton, where the figure is 50 percent.

"B.C. is in for, I would say, five or six really good years where the economy will be booming" says Jeffrey Simms, president of A. E. LePage Realty. "That is, debarring a catastrophic occurrence on the national level, such as a gigantic devaluation of the dollar, which would affect B.C. too" he added.

The softest market in Canada is in Winnipeg, where only 28% of listed homes sell within the same period, and where realtors have switched from ordinary space newspaper advertisements to large spreads with bigger photographs, and in the case of more expensive homes, have been obliged to put out descriptive brochures in order to keep properties moving.

Asked which price range takes most finesse on the part of a realtor to close the deal, Harold Waddell, president of Realty World Canada said that those in the highest price range do because generally business people in the upper salary echelons are more particular about financial arrangements, are aware of more possibilities, and are less likely to make an unthought-out, uneducated financial decision.

Until recently, $13,750 was needed for a downpayment on an $80,000 home. Now only $8000 is needed. According to realtors at a convention of franchised real estate agents held in Victoria recently, this will not result in people buying more expensive homes than they did prior to the MICC rule changes.

More people will be able to buy, but they will not buy in a higher price range because the Gross Debt Service Ratio has not altered. This states what percentage of the buyer's income may be used for mortgage payments.

"The husband of a couple buying a home in the top half of the price range has less influence over home purchasing decisions than does the husband of a couple buying in the lower price ranges", Mr. Waddell said. Couples buying less expensive homes are equally involved in the decision making process.

You ask: "Can I put stained glass windows in a modern home?"

ARCHITECTS ANSWER

By Terence J. Williams

QUESTION:

We have some stained glass windows that came from an old Victorian mansion, and we wonder if we can use them in our modern home. Would this be out of character, and if not, how would you suggest incorporating them?

ANSWER:

Certainly the Victorian stained glass will be out of character with your contemporary home. This, however, is not to say that the window cannot be used, and displayed successfully.

Contrast, syncopation (stress on a lesser note) and variations on a theme are all legitimate ways in which to add interest and vitality to any design. The important aspect of this technique is not to make the contrasting window so important that it is no longer a variation and too overpowering in the context of your modern home.

Contrast is, in my mind, a very valid aspect of design. By contrasting old and new, it indicates the trends of the future, and gives historical perspective. Builders of the past were not so concerned about style. Durham Cathedral started as a Romanesque structure in 1093 and was completed five centuries later in a perpendicular gothic form. The building has undergone many changes since.Of very great importance in this instance is the consistent use of stone.

Our own Crystal Gardens in Victoria is another example of not being afraid to use products of the past to provide buildings for the future. The secret is to be sensitive to the products and the materials and to use them to advantage.

In this instance do not let the window become too obvious or overpowering but treat it like a work of art. Place the window in a position where it can be admired and allowed to sparkle with the sun behind it.

Remember too, that an opaque stained glass window should not displace a "view" window, and that it can be used to give privacy to an interior. I certainly hope that helps.

YOU CAN MAKE IT!

Cabinet for guns or curios

By Steve Ellingson

Today's project can swing both ways . . . as a curio cabinet for your favorite collectibles . . . as a showcase for a gun collection (securely locked, of course). One pattern does it all, depending on your 'druthers'.

You start by building each section using our full-size traceable drawings. Pin lumber is recommended because it finishes up nicely. Of course you can order more exotic woods to create a real heirloom piece.

Join the 2 sections together; add the variations necessary for a curio cabinet or gun cabinet. Glass shelves are used for the former and a 6-place stock support is sawed out to support the guns in the latter. There is space at the top to hide a fluorescent light for illuminating your display.

Step-by-step instructions and a materials list make this project easier than it looks. To obtain Curio/Gun Cabinet, Pattern No. 646, send $4.50 (includes postage and handling) by cheque or money order to: U—Build Patterns, Box 160, Cote St. Luc, Montreal, P.O. H4V 2X3.

INTERIOR DESIGN

Oriental rugs gaining value

By JANINE LINDEN

Oriental rugs — long considered "old-fashioned" by contemporary decorators — are becoming more in vogue as people discover their practicality and more importantly, their value.

Within the "collectible" category, Oriental rugs are gaining value faster than other highly prized objects.

"Over the last 10 years, choice examples have appreciated as much as 30 percent each year," noted Doris Leslie Blau, a leading New York City dealer. "Thus, an Oriental rug is truly a treasure underfoot."

According to Blau, there are several reasons why Orientals are increasing in value. Demand for Oriental rugs has grown dramatically among Europeans and the oil-rich of the Arab countries. Oriental rugs are equally at home in small apartments or large houses and Middle Eastern supply sources of collectible rugs are disappearing as weavers turn to other trades.

In everyday terms, rugs and carpets became known as "Orientals" because they are derived from regions east of Europe. This sphere, properly referred to as Near Eastern, includes Central Asia, Persia, Anatolia, China and India.

Oriental rugs are broadly classified into six groups: Persian (floral patterns), Turkoman (tribal "gul" patterns), Caucasian (abstract geometric shapes), Turkish (symmetrical, ornamental motifs with some abstaction), Indian (tiny details in larger patterns) and Chinese (sophisticated, mystical motifs).

Blau said that Orientals may also be grouped as new, used, the commercially classified semi-antique and antique.

"Although opinions differ, in North America, antique rugs are widely held to be at least 100 years old, semi-antiques are at least 50-60 years old," she said.

In appraising an Oriental rug, Blau points out that experts take into account six important considerations: age, condition (does the rug have luster? Is it worn?), clarity and definition of pattern, knot count (in cases where density of knotting is indigenous to that area, one criterion used to determine value is number of hand-tied knots to the square inch), singularity (how unique is the rug?), and resale value (as determined by a combination of these variables).

One word of warning: it is critical to buy only one from a reputable source, never from a person or a store with a policy of no returns or exchanges. Any reputable dealer is happy to stand behind his or her merchandise and will accept for exchange — even after a dozen years — any rug originally purchased from him. This policy encourages "trade-ups" and insures that an owner's Oriental will always suit his needs.

Blau suggests that before arriving at a decision, shop at several established dealers and compare what they have to say. No two dealers will offer exactly the same prices or advice.

THE ORIENTAL RUG MARKET is booming, as people discover their value and practicality. Within the collectible category Oriental rugs are gaining value faster than other highly prized objects, so are good investments to make.

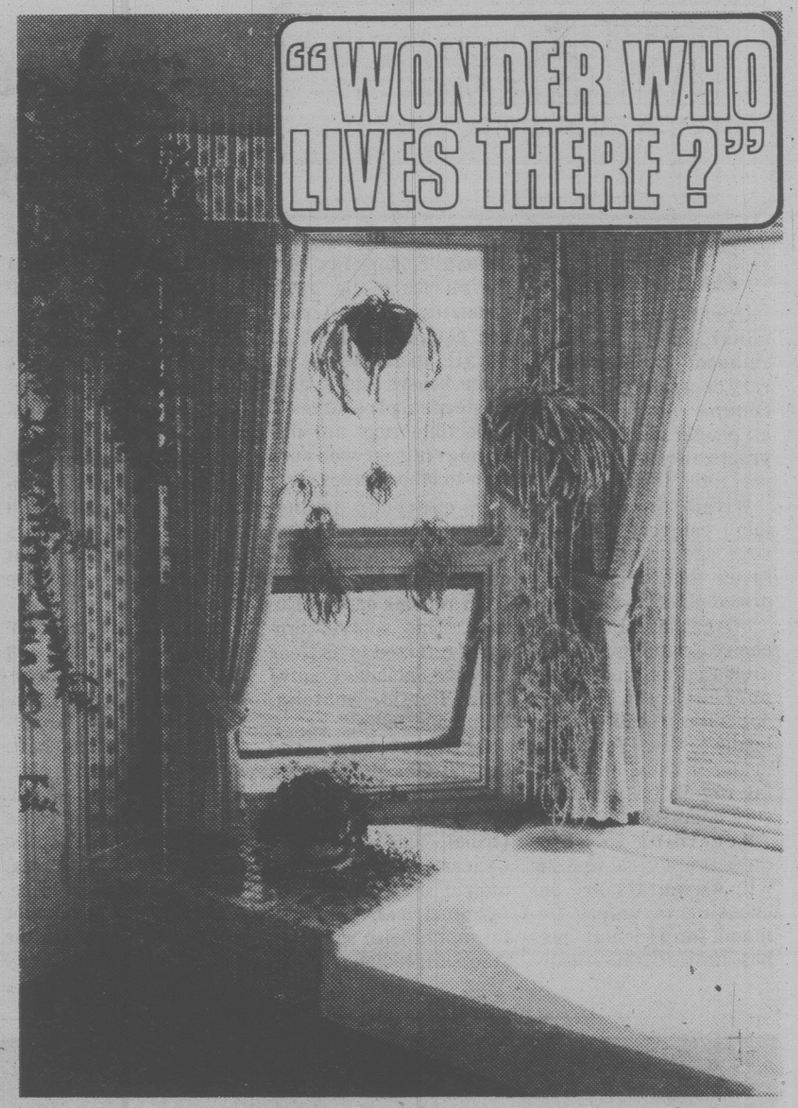
IN THE LIVING ROOM, looking up towards the front door. A collection of modern art covers this entire wall. Interesting pieces of pottery and books abound.



THE OCEAN IS VISIBLE beside, behind, and in front of whoever bathes in Monte's tub, the swirling waters of which are presumably a lot warmer, possibly exotically perfumed.

LOOKING DOWN into the living room, with its sliding glass doors that take you out onto the deck that overlooks the ocean. Two oatmeal coloured chesterfields group themselves around a huge square glass coffee table, massive fireplace.

Monte Vanton's house is a bachelor's paradise

ANNE SWANNELL

Unless you've been out in Arbutus Cove in a boat, you may not have wondered who lives in this silvery cedar house perched on the cliff.

The house is not visible from the road, and even when one is standing in the driveway it blends so well with its environment that it seems to have grown there.

"The house really has no 'facade' as such" says Monte Vanton, who had the house designed and built for him in 1973.

Monte Vanton was a real estate broker in California for twenty years before coming to Victoria ten years ago. He became involved in various development schemes around town; his own and others' (which he fought against), and fought to preserve the Gulf Islands from the same fate, dealt by what he referred to as 'greedy developers', as California.

"I believe a house becomes alive, as all inanimate objects do, through the love and pride of workmanship that a craftsman or an artist pours into what he does." That is why Monte, hired artists and craftsmen to work with stone, stained glass, and wood.

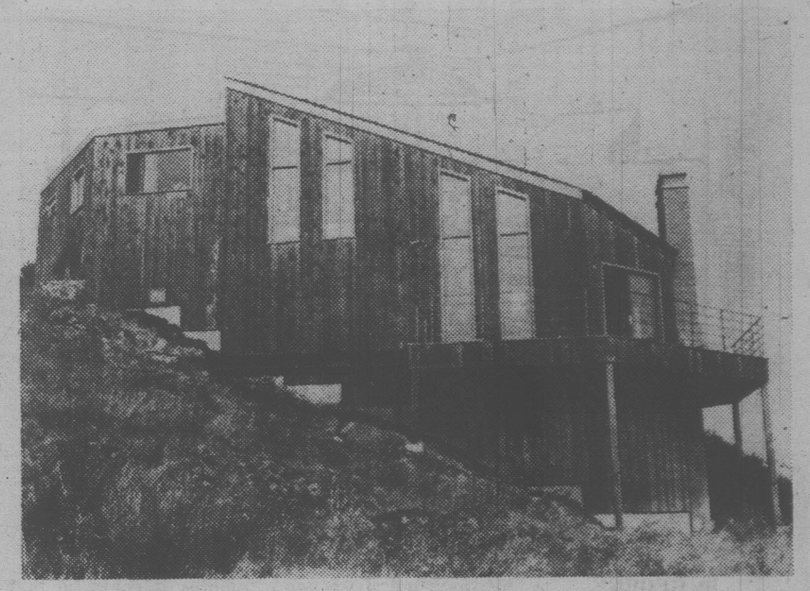
The man who lives here obviously entertains a lot.Imagine people wafting up and down that spiral staircase that leads from the entry down into the living room.

Mind you, the lack of a large formal dining room in so large and luxurious a home hints of entertainment on no grander scale than intimate dinners-a-quatre or luxurious breakfasts in bed.

The house presents breathtaking views from every window (two in the south-facing kitchen), each a painting by Mother Nature at her most composition-conscious, with every tree, every rock perfectly placed for balance.

And there is always that beautiful ocean backdrop; blue some days,pewter on stormy ones, often bronze just before night falls.

Probably the most elegant feature of the house is that bathroom, with its oval jaccuzi tub from which the ocean is visible all around, because it's completely surrounded by glass. So is the shower. Hanging plants and a bidet complete the picture.



SILVERY CEDAR house,at the end of Gordon Head Rd., photographed from the south, overlooks Arbutus Cove. Long windows are in dining area and living room.

DIRECTLY AHEAD of you when you come in the hand carved front door; a dining room and what the English call a reception room in one. Window angle matches that of the vaulted ceiling.

THIS HUGE CEDAR beam and its hand set stone pillars are what you see after you've parked your car and approach the house.They visually anchor the almost stark (viewed from the ocean side) lines of the house to its cliff top environment.

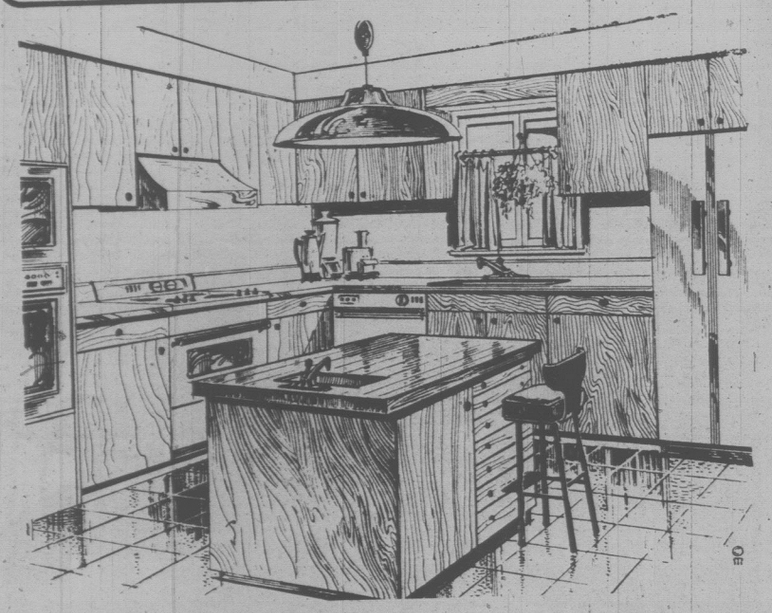
Kitchen floors: to underlay or not to underlay ?



By GEORGE DALGLEISH

Q. We plan on putting a new floor in our kitchen. We've been told by some that a new floor can go over the existing floor and other flooring contractors insist on putting down a new underlay. We would like to eliminate the underlay if we could since it builds up the level of the floor and we will have a small metal strip at each doorway because of the built up height of the floor. What do you advise?

A. The method of installation, that is whether it goes over underlay or not depends on two things. First the condition of your existing floor and second the material that you are installing. If you're installing sheet vinyl material such as a good quality cushion type flooring, it could be installed right over the existing floor if the existing floor is in good condition. That would mean that the existing floor is still down tight, not curling up and is free of voids and bumps. If the proper glue is used it could be glued right over the existing floor once it is cleaned properly. However, if you are installing the new super glossy expensive vinyl floors that cost between $18 and $20 per square metre then you'll likely find that the manufacturer of the product will insist that it be installed over good quality underlay plywood or particle board in order for them to guarantee the material. I don't recommend that you try to install this type of flooring yourself as even the experts have to go to school to learn how it's done. However, the softer cushion vinyl type is certainly a do-it-yourself flooring. So once you have decided on the type of flooring you require then you can determine the method to be used.

Q. We have dark spots appearing on our ceilings. It appears that the dark spots are forming behind the paint and then showing through. What could this be? And how can we repair it?

A. Usually dark spots that form behind paint on ceilings are due to moisture in the attic. This moisture can get there a number of ways. If they appear during the summer months then it could well be a leak in the roof. It doesn't take much water to cause the problem. If it appears in the winter or the spring months it could be that condensation is building up in the attic in the form of frost and then on warm days it is melting and coming through the paint. In the Victoria area it is more liable to be moisture due to a leaking roof. So before you go spending a lot of money on repairing and repainting your ceiling try to determine the cause. If the roof in leaking of course you should be able to spot the leak in the attic. Usually water will cause black marks to form on the underside of the roof boards. If you cannot locate the leak in this manner, then get a hose up on the roof to simulate a good rain storm and have someone in the attic with a flashlight to check for possible leaks. If it is a condensation and frost problem then more ventilation may be required. Once you have got to the cause of the problem then you simply repair the ceiling and repaint it in the normal way and the problem should not recur.

Q. Every time I turn on the hot water tap in the bathroom I get a vibrating noise coming from it. It is especially loud when the tap is only partially turned on. What is the cause and how can I remedy the problem?

A. The cause likely is a loose washer or worn out washer. Remove the spindle after shutting off the water and check the washer. If it is damaged then replace the washer and check the seat. The seat is the part where the washer is screwed down into to shut off the flow of water. If the seat is pitted then it may be possible to replace the seat if you have removable seats. If not, then a special tool called a seat reamer could be used to smooth out a non-removable seat. This should eliminate the vibration sound that you hear coming from your hot water tap.

Q. We live in an older house and know that there is no vapour barrier in the walls or ceiling. We're planning on having the house insulated and we want to know what we can do about a vapour barrier. Is it really necessary?

A. The vapour barrier is necessary to make your insulation effective as well as to make your home comfortable. However, most older homes do not have a vapour barrier and a lot of them have walls finished with lath and plaster. If the lack of a vapour barrier has not caused any undue problems up till now it likely won't cause any if you add insulation to your house. However, in some cases the lack of vapour barrier can cause severe problems especially if you tend to have high humidity levels in your house. If this is the case you could paint the walls with a special type of paint that becomes a vapour barrier when it dries. This paint is made by the Glidden Paint Company and is called Insul-Aid. Then, of course, you have to redecorate the house but if you're planning on repainting the interior of your house in any case and you know that here is no vapour barrier in the walls or ceiling it would be good to paint on this Insul-Aid material before repainting. In my tests it has shown to be a good vapour barrier and certainly better than none at all. If you're going to the expense and trouble of reinsulating your house you should take it one step further and try to provide an effective vapour barrier. This method mentioned is about the only way you can add a vapour barrier to an existing finished wall without taking the wall apart or taking all the existing insulation out from the ceiling.

Room size often dictates choice of wallcovering

Walls do a marvelous job of "dressing" a room and creating a backdrop for living. But, since they are not only the first thing people notice, but also cover the greatest amount of surface in any room, they can present some decorating problems.

As far as wallpaper is concerned, remember, large patterns tend to make a room look smaller. They are best kept on one wall anyway, with the other walls painted a neutral shade, or one of the colors used in the wallpaper.

Vertical stripes carry your eye upward, so are not a good idea in a small, high-ceilinged room, although you can sometimes get away with it if you paint the ceiling a dark shade, which makes it seem lower.

In general, light colors recede, and light cool colors (greens and blues) recede even more. Dark, warm shades, such as the reds, browns, wines, and oranges come forward, and will therefore make a room seem cosier, more intimate....and smaller.

The use of mirrors on one wall can double the apparent size of your room. Mirror tiles are available at lumber companies and department stores. They require a flat, even wall surface.

Carpet remnants or sample squares in multi colors, or tones of the same color make a great wallcovering in a room where rough-housing will be going on. This type of wallcovering also absorbs sound, so it's ideal for rumpus rooms.

CUTTING ROSES IN SEPTEMBER was Mrs. Ethel Carrington of 125 Linden Avenue. Ethel was born in Winnipeg, and has lived in Victoria for four years. Preserve leaf sprays now with glycerine solution

Some of the loveliest decorations a homemaker and hostess can have in her home for fall come from nature.

In this part of the country leaves and berries, for example, delight the eye during the autumn season and many a home can be decorated with these beauties for weeks and even months, by following simple methods.

There is a glycerine-treatment for these bounties which can preserve the fall splendor of these leaves almost indefinitely.

Be sure you select sprays and leaves which are not too brittle nor at the height of their beauty. Generally beech, oak, wild apple and mountain ash, among others, take to the treatment well, with lasting results.

Keep in mind the size of container you will put your treasures in...or perhaps just a corner of a mantel is what you have in mind.

Whatever the choice, don't overfill the container. Give the leaves room to breathe. A few branches are often more effective, anyway, than a large group.

Mix glycerine in a solution of two parts water to one part glycerine. The amount needed depends on the size of container and of the branches. The stems should stand in the liquid to a depth of three to four inches.

Take care that the solution doesn't get too sticky. Tip the bottle of glycerine into the vase and then refill the same bottle twice with water and mix the two together. Be careful not to overdo the proportion of glycerine. Too much will cause the tips of the leaves to seep sticky drops onto the furniture, etc.

Now, see to the branches. Trim off any twigs at bottom to ensure a length of bare stalk to work with. Slit bottom with a knife for about three inches or so, then lay the end across a cheese board or such, and with a hammer or similar object 'bruise' the stalks around a little above it. You want a softened and separated end through which the liquid can be absorbed.

Arrange the leaves in the vase, being sure that every branch is well steeped in the solution. Then put it aside for a week or so in a cool room. The liquid will rise through the veins of the stems and leaves until they are soaked with the solution to the tip of every leaf.

Meanwhile the tinting will continue as if the leaves were still on the tree! When the leaves are fully turned and the glycerine has penetrated, the color is 'set.' For example, beeches turn gold, while wild apple turns a dark red and mountain ash, a deep matte brown.

When the shine is evident at the end of each leaf (from the glycerine) you can be sure preservation is complete.

No-basement bungalow for rear view lot

Here's a crisply modern three bedroom design which is ideally suited to the narrow frontage residential building lot, and which provides the medium-size family with a wide range of modern conveniences.

The design is well-suited to the rear view lot, as it incorporates a full-width rear patio and the living-dining room combination connects to this patio via several sliding glass doors.

The low-profile exterior, finished in horizontal channel siding, with brick chimney and shake or shingle roof, and with stairwell skylight, offers the clean lines and smooth unbroken surfaces so popular in today's home designs.

The deeply weather-sheltered entry leads into a compact reception foyer and closet storage area and, either straight down the hallway to the living-dining room combination, or right into the large family room-dinette.

he long rectangular living-dining room features a full wall of sliding glass doors to the rear patio and an island cantilevered-hearth masonry fireplace for convivial "at-homes".

The dining room connects to the kitchen via convenient pocket door.

The well-planned U-shape kitchen has generous cupboard storage, abundant countertop work surfaces and a step-saving work triangle. It divides the formal dining room from the more casual family room-dinette for excellent separation of entertainment dining and relaxed family meals.

The utility complex, accessible from the outdoors, the garage and the main hallway, incorporates a two-piece vanity bath, the heating and hot water core, luggage storage, mud room and laundry/utility area.

All three bedrooms have rear exposure for excellent view and natural light. Each has ample closet storage and easy access to the central bath and linen storage. The large master bedroom has a three-piece ensuite with tub, and a front-facing balcony for private sunning. A large trunk storage situated under the eaves is accessible from the walk-in closet of the second bedroom

A skylit foyer and stairwell creates a moody interior and invites decoration with exotic plants and wall hangings.

Plans for design No 79-1945 may be purchased either by the single set, at a cost of $85.00 for the first set and $14.00 for each additional set, or by the package. A five-set plan package, including the first set, is economically priced at $120.00 and an eight-set plan package, also including the first set, is only $150.00.

Whichever method you choose, please include $5.00 for postage and handling. B.C. residents add 5% sales tax.

Send for the current edition of Select Home Designs Magazine, Series 42, featuring imaginative decorating and home improvement ideas, plus 32 quality home plans of every type. Available for $2.75 ($2.00 plus .75 cents postage and handling).

Art prints

by JOHN HEARN

"Investing in prints," says Ashcroft-Munro who market fine art prints in Toronto, "is like investing in anything else. It calls for the same research and the same attention to detail".

That means buying a few books on prints and their history so you know the difference between a lithograph and serigraph. It also means taking the time to visit galleries and museums.

Museum print shows, for instance, provide opportunities to study prints in detail to get first hand exposure to the difference between an etching and an engraving, or what the paper looks like on a genuine 15th century woodcut.

Curators usually include descriptive material that can be tremendously useful in learning about prints.

The dealer is a key individual for a collector. Some have become legends. Others are famous for their duplicity. Picking a good one is crucial.

That's where the museum comes in. A new collector should ask the curators whom they would recommend. The art world is very 'clubby' and museum staffs usually know who is reputable.

I spoke with Alan Munro of Ashcroft-Munro, curious as to why they are using so descredited a term as "limited edition."

He pointed out that in the world of fine art prints, limited edition may mean 10, 50, 100 or in extreme cases, a few hundred copies of the same print, not the 10s or even 100s of thousands which are common in the great commercial market of plates and medals.

A fine art print is one which has been made, either directly by, or under the personal supervision of the artist himself. Every copy has been carefully examined by him and discarded if even slightly flawed. Finally it is usually numbered and signed by him as a token of authenticity.

Limited, signed and numbered editions of original works by international artists have soared in price in the past ten years and appreciation rates of ten, twenty and thirty times the original issuing price are fairly commonplace, while works by lesser known artists have trebled and quadrupled.

Write to Ashcroft-Munro at 146 Yorkville Ave., Toronto M5R 1C3 for their catalogue of fine artprints. Readers' letters should be addressed to Collector's Item, R.R. No. 1, Lowbanks, Ontario, N0A 1K0.
